SEC. 1604. STUDY OF ANTI-DRUG ASSISTANCE TO THE ANDEAN REGION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the operations of international narcotics trafficking organizations pose a direct threat to the national security of the United States and Latin America;

(3) recent events in Colombia make clear the need for addressing the threat of international narcotics trafficking in Peru and Bolivia before situations there further deteriorate;

(4) for any antinarcotics strategy to work in the Andean region an integrated program of economic development, interdiction, and eradication must be developed;

(5) United States Government anti-narcotics policies toward the Andean region have not in the past been coordinated with our country's trade and economic policies as exemplified by recent negotiations over the international coffee agreement;

(6) any successful strategy for combating the influence of international narcotics trafficking in the Andean region must address the economic situation in that region;

(7) many of the farmers who produce coca leaf in the Andean region do so as the sole means of economic livelihood for themselves and their families;

(8) many of these farmers would stop growing coca if provided with alternative means to earn a livelihood;

(9) the economic assistance component of an Andean strategy must reduce the political pressures generated by a successful interdiction and eradication program, offset its negative economic impact on the countries foreign exchange earnings, create jobs for people who lose their livelihood, and in the long run, deal with the region's fundamental structural and development problems;

(10) individual country resources are not adequate to manage the immediate and short-run economic and social issues, much less solve the narcotics problem, neither will indigenous resources grow fast enough to sustain present levels of development, unless the economies grow briskly and the political systems are stabilized and reinforced; and

(11) national, regional, and United States resources, combined, are also insufficient and the overall effort must be internationalized to include Japan, Canada, and Western Europe.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than sixty days after the conclusion of the international conference, known as the International Conference on Combating Illegal Drug Production, Trafficking, and Use in the Western Hemisphere, required by section 4104 of title IV of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-690), or one hundred and eighty days after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever comes first, the President shall report to Congress on—

(1) the outcome of the International Conference;

(2) his strategy for increasing economic development to the Andean region, to be used in conjunction with a program of interdiction and eradication;

(3) his program for coordinating trade and economic policies of our Government with our Nation's overall antinarcotics strategy for the Andean region;

(4) his strategy for internationalizing the economic development assistance to the Andean region in order to include assistance from Japan, Canada, and Western Europe;

(5) the cost over the next five years for a program of economic assistance that would provide an alternative to coca production in the Andean region;

(6) the cost over the next five years of the eradication and interdiction components of the Andean strategy;

(7) the feasibility and cost of purchasing the entire coca crop in the Andean region; and

(8) any recommendations for the modification of United States debt strategy to take into account the unique and exceptional burden imposed on the Andean economics by terrorism and drug trafficking.

(c) BUDGET REQUEST.—The President shall submit to the Congress, with the submission of the budget required by section 1006 of Public Law 100-690, such supplemental budget requests for fiscal years 1990 and 1991 covering the United States share of the cost of additional economic assistance as is necessary to carry out his Andean antinarcotics strategy.

SEC. 1636. DRUG EDUCATION TO PREVENT THE USE OF DRUGS AND BEVERAGE ALCOHOL DURING PREGNANCY.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) the use of drugs or the excessive use of beverage alcohol during pregnancy poses risks and serious injury or impairment to mother and child;

(2) three hundred and seventy-five thousand infants are born to mothers who engage in substance abuse during pregnancy and that number appears to grow exponentially each year;

(3) the initial cost of providing care to infants born exposed to maternal substance abuse during pregnancy is over $13,000,000,000 annually;

(4) the human cost in suffering and loss to society in terms of wasted human potential of both the abusing mother and especially the abused and innocent child is both incalculable and avoidable;

(5) drug and beverage alcohol abuse during pregnancy produces severe and lasting or even irreversible physical, mental, and emotional damage to the child, including low birthweight, prematurity, congenital deformities, risk of child abuse and death;

(6) it is essential to reduce the incidence of substance abuse by pregnant women and the birth of infants addicted or otherwise injured or impaired by such abuse, both for the sake of the mother and especially in order to reduce the avoidable cruel suffering of and damage to infants so afflicted, and to reduce the unaffordable costs in tax dollars that will be required as the necessary alternative to successful preventive measures;

(7) preventive drug abuse resistance education, including instruction by medical staff and experts in the field of maternal substance abuse during pregnancy, is needed to reduce the incidence of infants born exposed to maternal drug abuse during pregnancy;

(8) preventive drug abuse resistance education is especially needed to reduce the exploding incidence of cocaine use which has resulted in unprecedented infant mortality rates in many cities across the United States; and

(9) preventive drug abuse resistance education programs, Drug Abuse Resistance Education and Substance Abuse and Narcotics Education, have proven successful in reversing the destructive use of drugs during pregnancy.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that preventive drug abuse resistance education programs which seek to reduce the incidence of maternal substance abuse during pregnancy are essential to our efforts to win the war on drugs.

(c) Part B of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986 is amended as follows:

Section 5122(a)(6) is amended by striking the period and inserting the following: "and education regarding the risks of drug and beverage alcohol abuse during pregnancy.".

SEC. 1637. UNITED STATES-MEXICO JOINT AGREEMENT ON THE INTERDICTION OF AIRBORNE NARCOTICS SMUGGLERS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the Governments of the United States and Mexico, pursuant to section 4407 of Public Law 100-690, have a Letter of Agreement committing Mexico to "reduce drug production, drug consumption, and drug trafficking within its own territory," and "increase cooperation with United States drug enforcement officials";

(2) between 30 and 33 per centum of all marijuana, heroin, and cocaine entering the United States moves through or originates in Mexico;

(3) the Drug Enforcement Administration reports that nearly 60 per centum of its illegal cocaine seizures in the Southwest border area of the United States are air-related;

(4) the Drug Enforcement Administration knows of at least eleven major landing strip locations in Mexico which serve as launching points for airborne cocaine smugglers to fly to the United States and the United States Customs Service estimates that such illicit traffickers have approximately two thousand clandestine runways at their disposal on the American side of the border;

(5) section 2013 of Public Law 99-570 empowers Congress to evaluate the required annual reports of the President on whether narcotics-producing nations have "cooperated fully with the United States to prevent the cultivation, sale, and traffic of illegal drugs."

(b) POLICY.—The Senate declares that—

(1) the President of the United States should initiate discussions with the Government of Mexico to develop and implement a bilateral agreement to monitor, pursue, and capture airborne smugglers of illicit narcotics. Such an agreement should include provisions for reciprocal overflight and hot pursuit authority as well as arrangements for the joint crewing of United States and Mexican drug enforcement aircraft.

(2) the President should report on the status of negotiations concerning this agreement in the annual International Narcotics Control Strategy Report on Mexico.

(3) if the President certifies in this report that the United States and Mexico have made significant progress toward the conclusion of the agreement, to include provisions for reciprocal overflight and hot pursuit authority as well as arrangements for the joint crewing of United States and Mexican drug enforcement aircraft, described in subsection (1), the Senate would consider such a declaration as a credible sign of the Government of Mexico's desire to "cooperate fully" with the United States on illegal drug interdiction programs pursuant to section 2013 of Public Law 99-570.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $2,000,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. McCAIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader is recognized.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. 1726

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate turns to the consideration of S. 1726, the McCain, et al., bill, to repeal medicare catastrophic coverage provisions, and for other purposes, it be considered under the following time agreement:

That there be 1 hour on the bill to be equally divided between Senator McCAIN and Senator BENTSEN or their designees; that Senator McCAIN be recognized first to modify S. 1726; that a point of order with respect to the bill or amendment being in violation of the Budget Act follow immediately after the McCain modification, and at that time Senator McCAIN be recognized to make a motion to waive the Budget Act for consideration of the bill and all amendments; that there be 1 hour equally divided on the motion, and that no other points of order; that the following amendments then be considered under the following time limitations and in the order listed.

Mr. EXON. And what?

Mr. MITCHELL. And in the order listed.

An amendment by Senator KENNEDY, with 30 minutes of debate, equally divided, which amendment would eliminate the surtax and retain the drug and hospital benefits; an amendment by Senator WALLOP, with 30 minutes of debate, equally divided, which amendment would make the program voluntary; an amendment by Senator GRAHAM of Florida, with 30 minutes, equally divided, which amendment provides for modified repeal; another amendment by Senator GRAHAM of Florida, with 30 minutes of debate, equally divided, which amendment provides that if there is no repeal then there will be established conditions for voluntary opting out of the program; an amendment by Senators HARKIN and LEVIN, with 1 hour of debate, equally divided, which repeals the surtax and finances the benefits by extension of the 33-percent income tax bracket; an amendment by Senator EXON, with 30 minutes of debate, equally divided, which repeals the surtax and supplemental benefits, part B flat premium, and directs the Finance Committee to determine what benefits could be paid for with the flat premium total repeal occurring on December 31, 1989, if no new legislation is enacted by that time; an amendment by Senators DURENBERGER and MITCHELL, one with 1 hour of debate, equally divided, which amendment would retain parts A and B of the program; an amendment by Senator RIEGLE and Senator CHAFEE, with 1 hour of debate, equally divided, which amendment would eliminate the surtax and provide catastrophic coverage with a flat premium, other benefits to be optional; an amendment by Senators DANFORTH and ROTH, with 1 hour of debate, equally divided, which amendment would repeal the program; a possible amendment by Senator BRADLEY, with 10 minutes of debate, equally divided, which amendment deals with the respite provision; and then, finally, the McCain bill itself, which will have 1 hour, equally divided, under the previous provision of this unanimous-consent request; that the above-mentioned amendments be first-degree amendments; that no other amendment be in order; that no motion to commit the bill be in order; that no motion to table be in order; that it be in order to offer any of the foregoing amendments notwithstanding the adoption of another amendment; and that following the disposition of the amendments and the using or yielding back of time on the bill, the Senate proceed without any intervening action to third reading and final passage of S. 1726, as amended, if amended; provided further, that the bill, if adopted, remain at the desk and the language of S. 1726, as amended, if amended, be offered as an amendment to any revenue bill other than the reconciliation bill coming from the House on which there would be 1 hour of debate equally divided and against which no point of order would lie and no amendment to the amendment would be in order.

Mr. EXON. Reserving the right to object, would the leader kindly advise me? I was trying to keep track here. After the Riegle amendment, what was the next one after that?

Mr. MITCHELL. It would be the Danforth-Roth amendment.

Mr. EXON. Is that the repeal measure?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. EXON. How much time on that?

Mr. MITCHELL. One hour, equally divided.

Mr. EXON. Let me further see if I understand. When we open debate on the McCain bill, which would be the underlying bill, it would be discussed for 1 hour; is that correct.

Mr. MITCHELL. There would be 1 hour on the bill, but I believe that it is Senator McCAIN's intention to reserve all or most of the hour for debate at the conclusion of the disposition of all the amendments and prior to the vote on his bill, which would be the last vote.

Mr. EXON. I understand the majority leader to say when he made these listings that the McCain amendment would have an hour at the end; is that correct?

Mr. MITCHELL. The McCain provision will be the underlying bill. He has 1 hour on that. He could use that at the opening of the debate, or some portion of it, and the balance could be used prior to the vote on the underlying bill, which would be the last vote.

Mr. EXON. So that would be 2 hours on the McCain amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. No. He has only 1 hour.

Mr. EXON. What is the hour to start with?

Mr. MITCHELL. He has an hour and he can use some portion of it at the beginning and some portion at the end, but he has no more than an hour.

Mr. EXON. I have no objection to that.

I do not know, and was not in on the discussions, but if this unanimous-consent agreement is made and entered into, then we would take the amendments up by agreement in the order that the Senator just stated?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. EXON. This Senator was not consulted as to how the amendments would fall. Would there be any objection to the Senator from Nebraska requesting that this amendment be placed at a different location on the list?

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to that. Not all of the Senators were consulted. Most of those who were consulted said they had no preference as to where they appeared on the list. Others were not consulted and this was an effort to go back and forth between Republicans and Democrats to the extent possible. But I would be pleased to consider any request the Senator would like to make.

Mr. EXON. I would appreciate it very much if the leader and the others could agree to the Exon amendment that you have accurately described be placed further down on the list. I would like to have it immediately preceding the Danforth amendment. If I understand it correctly, the Danforth amendment, the second one from the bottom above the closing argument, whatever time was left by Mr. McCAIN, if the Exon amendment could just precede that particular amendment to be offered by Senator DANFORTH and Senator ROTH, as I understand it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The purpose of my announcing that we would seek this argument was to alert Senators, like the Senator from Nebraska, that we would be doing this. I asked all those Senators who have an interest to be present on the floor. So I will inquire of those Senators who are present if they object.

Mr. DURENBERGER. If the majority leader will yield, I think the majority leader has tried his best during the course of the day to elicit all of the amendments and then in the last hour or 2 to try to accommodate all of us to give the widest opportunity for debate on various approaches to catastrophic.

My inquiry to the Senator from Nebraska would be, I do not know the content of the amendment of the Senator and to some degree, as I understand the way the majority leader went through this, as he indicated in part, it is a matter of going from one side of the aisle to the other.

Also, in part, there is some logic in leaving the repeal amendments for somewhere near the end of the process.

Does the Senator from Nebraska have a repeal?

Mr. EXON. I have no objection to that. In fact, I just had requested that, if I understood the Senator from Minnesota. I have no objection to that. I am simply asking that the unanimous consent that we are now trying to propound be entered into, with the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska placed in the slot immediately ahead of the consideration of the repeal amendment by Senator ROTH and Senator DANFORTH, if I understand it, which was the next-to-the-last one before going to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

Is that correct? Is that the right sequence?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. EXON. I am merely asking if the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska could be changed from the position that it held under the announcement made by the majority leader to a spot immediately preceding the debate on the amendment by Senator ROTH and Senator DANFORTH.

Mr. DURENBERGER. My only inquiry was as to the content of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. What is the purpose of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL. As I stated, and I will read from the summary description that has been provided to me, Senator EXON's amendment would repeal the surtax and supplemental benefits retained in part B flat premium, direct the Finance Committee to determine what benefits could be paid for with the flat premium, but provides further for total repeal of the program on December 31, 1989, if no new legislation has been enacted by that time.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I have no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does any other Senator present have any objection to Senator EXON's amendment being placed immediately preceding the Danforth-Roth amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am advised there may be objection. But I have to say that I specifically stated, prior to the last vote, that any Senator who is interested should remain on the floor to protect his rights. That is the very reason the Senator from Nebraska is here. I asked all Senators to be here.

If a Senator has an objection, it is incumbent upon that Senator to come to the floor and express an objection.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask that my request be modified in the following four respects:

First, that there be added the following provision, that the agreement be in the usual form with respect to the division of time;

Second, that at that point in the request in which I stated that Senator McCAIN be recognized to make a motion to waive the Budget Act, that there be inserted at that time, Senator McCAIN or Senator DOMENICI be recognized to make a motion to waive the Budget Act;

Third, that the provision prohibiting motions to commit not be applicable to the Harkin-Levin amendment, which has, I am advised, already been drafted as a motion to commit;

And fourth, that the order of amendments be altered to provide that the amendment by Senator EXON immediately precede the Danforth-Roth amendment, and follow the Riegle-Chafee amendment, rather than in the order stated.

So there should be no misunderstanding, I will then now reread the proposed order of considering amendments for everyone's consideration and understanding. The amendments will be in the following order, after the motion to waive amendments by Senators KENNEDY, WALLOP, GRAHAM of Florida, then Graham of Florida, Durenberger-Mitchell, Riegle-Chafee, then Exon, then Danforth-Roth, then Bradley with a possible amendment, and then the underlying McCain bill.

Mr. President, I apologize. I left out the Harkin-Levin amendment, which should follow the second Graham amendment and, under the revised list, precede the Durenberger-Mitchell amendment.

Mr. EXON. Reserving the right to object, when we get down to all the amendments, you come down to the Riegle amendment, then the Exon amendment, then the amendment to be offered by Senator ROTH and Senator DANFORTH with regard to outright repeal. Then I understood that the last amendment would be the amendment by Senator MCCAIN. Was there another amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL. Senator BRADLEY has requested a possible amendment regarding respite provisions which would be 10 minutes, which I understand he has discussed with Senator MCCAIN.

Mr. EXON. If I understand it, the Bradley amendment would be some kind of an addition to the list that the Senator from Arizona is proposing; is that correct?

Mr. MCCAIN. That is correct.

Mr. EXON. One last question. I appreciate the fact that the Senator from Arizona very kindly agreed to setting aside the freestanding arrangement, so forth and so on. Was there any agreement at that time when it was properly agreed that the Senator from Arizona be recognized first that we could also have the right to amend his amendment at that time? Or is that part of the unanimous-consent agreement that you are requesting at this time?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is my understanding that there was no provision to that effect at that time and that this is now being included in this unanimous-consent request at the request of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. EXON. In that regard, I had assumed, and I had thought that most of the Members of the body had assumed, and I believe there were some questions, if I remember correctly, at the time that the amendment would be offered by Senator MCCAIN. Would that essentially be the amendment that he had previously offered and then thoughtfully agreed at the request of the majority leader to put off to another time? I guess before I can agree to that, can I have some degree of explanation from the Senator from Arizona as to what proposed changes in his original amendment he is going to make tomorrow before we agree to allow that?

Mr. MCCAIN. If I might illuminate, it is a modification I am seeking which basically allows for a delay of 1 year in two programs in order to reduce the costs in order to meet the OMB budget numbers. They are minor in nature. I though about doing them just as a technical modification, but I sought a modification which is a delay of two of the small programs for 1 year, to reduce the overall costs in order to reach the OMB numbers. It in no way changes the basic thrust of the amendment. It in no way changes the basic proposal that I have. It is simply a bookkeeping measure, a 1-year delay in two of the small programs in order to meet the OMB numbers.

Mr. EXON. To some extent, the Senator is cutting down the benefits or delaying them so as to better meet the number figure; is that correct?

Mr. MCCAIN. That is exactly right.

Mr. EXON. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request propounded by the majority leader? Hearing none, the unanimous-consent request is agreed to.

The text of the agreement is as follows:

Ordered, That at the hour of 10:30 a.m., on October 6, 1989, the Senate turn to the consideration of S. 1726, to repeal Medicare catastrophic coverage provisions, and for other purposes, and that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] be recognized first to modify S. 1726.

Ordered further, That a point of order with respect to the bill, or amendment, being in violation of the Budget Act, follow immediately after the McCain modification and that either the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] or the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] be recognized to move to waive the Budget Act on the bill and amendments, on which there shall be 1 hour debate, to be equally divided.

Ordered further, That no other points of order be in order.

Ordered further, That the following amendments be first degree amendments, be the only amendments in order, be offered in the following order, and with the time thereon, where specified, to be equally divided and controlled:

Kennedy: Eliminate surtax, retain drug and hospital benefits, 30 minutes;

Wallop: Making the program voluntary, 30 minutes;

Graham: Modified repeal, 30 minutes;

Graham: If no repeal, then establish conditions for voluntary opting out, 30 minutes;

Harkin-Levin: Repeals surtax, finances benefits by extension of 33 percent income tax bracket, 1 hour;

Durenberger-Mitchell: Retaining parts A and B of the catastrophic insurance, 1 hour;

Riegle-Chafee: Eliminates surtax, provides catastrophic coverage with a flat premium, other benefits optional, 1 hour;

Exon: Repeals surtax and supplemental benefits, part B flat premium, directs Finance Committee to determine what benefits could be paid for with flat premium, total repeal on 12/31/89 if no new legislation enacted, 30 minutes;

Danforth-Roth: Repealing the insurance (identical to House language), 1 hour;

Bradley: Respite provisions, 10 minutes.

Ordered further, That all amendments be in order, notwithstanding the adoption of another amendment.

Ordered further, That no motion to commit, with the exception of the Harkin-Levin amendment, be in order and that no motion to table be in order.

Ordered further, That time for debate on the bill be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], or their designees.

Ordered further, That following the disposition of the amendments, and the using or yielding back of the time on the bill, the Senate proceed without any intervening action to third reading and final passage of S. 1726, as amended, if amended.

Ordered further, That the bill, if adopted, remain at the desk and the language of S. 1726, as amended, if amended, be offered as an amendment to any revenue bill, other than the reconciliation bill, coming from the House on which there would be 1 hour for debate, to be equally divided, and against which no point of order would lie and no amendment to the amendment be in order.

Ordered further, That the agreement be in the usual form. (Oct. 5, 1989).

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank all of my colleagues. I thank the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Arizona and the others here. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FLAG DESECRATION BILL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, all of us by now have heard of the Supreme Court's decision in Texas versus Johnson—the infamous flag-burning case. In this case, the Supreme Court said—unbelievably—that flag burning was a lawful hobby in this country. The Court also suggested that our Federal flag desecration statute violates the first amendment and is, therefore, unconstitutional.

Over the past couple of months, lawyers—acting more like a team of surgeons—have been tinkering with the language of the Federal flag desecration statute in a desperate effort to restore its constitutionality. They believe that the statute would somehow be constitutional if Congress removed a few of the statute's words—words like "cast contempt upon," "publicly," and "defiles." According to the lawyers, a Federal flag desecration statute without these words would not violate the first amendment, since the statute would only prohibit acts of conduct against the flag, not words of speech. The statute, the lawyers say, would also be constitutional since it would view the flag neutrally.

At first, I thought a little surgery could do the trick—that the Federal flag desecration statute could indeed be revived with a Senate bill that deleted a few simple words.

But then I thought a little bit more—and then I realized what a bad idea this Senate bill was after all. Let me tell you why.

By removing the words "cast contempt upon," "publicly," and "defiles," the Senate bill would prohibit all sorts of conduct—conduct that Congress has absolutely no business regulating. The Senate bill, for example, would prohibit public and private acts, intentional and unintentional acts, contemptuous and uncontemptuous acts. You name it—the Senate bill covers it.

Let's talk about the word "publicly" for a moment. By deleting this word from the Federal flag desecration statute, the Senate bill would punish even those who unintentionally soil the flag in the privacy of their own homes. The Senate bill—in other words—could give the police a hunting license to enter our homes and arrest even the innocent child who spills some milk on the flag while in the family kitchen. A far fetched example? Perhaps. But such an arrest could be perfectly legal under the Senate bill. I repeat: Perfectly legal.

You know, I cannot quite understand why Congress is so defensive about this issue. I cannot understand why Congress is in such a mad rush to conform with a Supreme Court decision about which 97 Senators—97 Senators—expressed their "profound disappointment." And I cannot understand why Congress is so eager to pass a bill that is patently overbroad and still probably unconstitutional.

I will make no bones about it: I want a Federal flag desecration statute that punishes what it is supposed to punish—flag desecration. I want a statute that protects the cherished values that the flag symbolizes, not a statute that views the flag neutrally—as if it were some rock. And I want a statute that punishes people who "publicly cast contempt upon the flag," not a statute that lumps the innocent with people like Gregory Johnson.

Now, I will be the first to admit that the current Federal flag desecration statute is now unconstitutional as a result of the Texas versus Johnson decision. But the way to preserve that statute is not to neuter it. The way to protect the Federal statute—as well as the 48 State flag desecration statutes—is through an affirmative step, through a constitutional amendment. Pure and simple.

So, Mr. President, Old Glory is waving today—waving goodbye to protection; the kind of protection the American people are demanding and that the symbol of our Nation deserves. It is clear to me—especially after today's votes—that the statute "fix" is really no "fix" at all. It does not work. It will never work.

It was an effort that began with hope, but has now become hopeless. The only guarantee that can do the job is a constitutional amendment. If there was any doubt about it before, there's no doubt about it now.

AMERICAN VALUES

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, we all know the President pro tempore of the Senate, ROBERT BYRD of West Virginia, is a man who lives what the exhorts others to do. He does not merely admire music, but makes music for all to enjoy. He is not content to complain that traditional formal wear is uncomfortable and urge that men be liberated from it, but has courageously liberated himself from the strictures of tuxedos without inhibiting his social life. Having worked his way from the coal fields of West Virginia to the mine fields of the U.S. Senate, he did not just advocate life-long education for others, but continued his own formal education, earning his law degree with honors while carrying out his growing Senate responsibilities with distinction. Fortunately for all of us, he continues his study of history, literature, and the Bible and is kind enough to share the knowledge and insights thus gained with his colleagues and friends.

On Wednesday, Senator BYRD spoke to the weekly Senate prayer breakfast on a subject that concerns us all—American values. He held a mirror up, not just to the perpetrator of the latest scandals around the Nation, but to our own daily conduct, and the standards we set and habits we encourage. I ask permission to share his valuable thoughts with the entire Senate, and to have them printed, in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEDITATION FOR PRAYER BREAKFAST, OCTOBER 4, 1989

(By Senator Robert Byrd)

In his letter to the Church at Philippi, the Apostle Paul wrote: "Finally, breathen, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Philippians 4: 8

Paul was a sophisticated man of the Roman world—a much-traveled man, a learned man, an informed man.

Paul was not ignorant of the society and civilization in which he lived.

Paul knew, for instance, that many Greek and Roman temples were glorified houses of prostitution—religious centers wherein, for a price, a man might buy sexual favors from a priestess.

Paul knew that in the arenas of the Mediterranean world, roaring, laughing, drunken crowds might enjoy watching animals tearing human beings apart or gladiators battling one another to the death.

Paul knew that under Roman law slaves might be put to death on the whim of their owners, and that some men had deliberately turned their backs on their own masculinity to affect female attire and pursue sex with their own gender.

And certainly Paul was aware that, in just his maturity, the glorious Roman Empire had been ruled by one emperor—Caligula—who had wed his sister, murdered her with his own sword, declared himself a god, and made his horse a Roman senator, and another emperor—Nero—who had murdered his own mother and his wife.

Roman civilization, for all of its superiority and strength, was a cesspool of pornography, sexual excess, drunkenness and drug-taking, murder, faithlessness, and public immorality.

Yet, against all of that, Paul counsels, "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

Why would Paul write such Pollyanna advice to the Church at Philippi?

First, Paul had been reared in a strict Jewish tradition—the tradition of the one people in the Ancient World who saw themselves as witnessess to the purity, righteousness, and justice of the Living God; and second, Paul believed that the Gospel he proclaimed called on those who believed it to witness to that same Biblical holiness and purity of life in that debauched Roman world.

To Paul, Jew and Christian alike were called to the mission of shunning the evil and moral slime of their day and to live a higher life.

Paul likewise knew that those who allowed their outward lives to wallow in degradation and pollution would soon find their inner lives drowning in that same degradation and pollution.

Unfortunately, I wonder if Paul would judge our own society in which we live—morally much superior to his own.

To be sure, we no longer allow gladiators to kill one another for public amusement or animals to devour human victims at RFK Stadium or Memorial Stadium.

But take a look at what we do permit:

A drug epidemic of such vicious proportions that some addicted mothers have been reported to offer their own young daughters to any man who would pay the price of a "fix"; television programs that come into our homes touting prostitutes, murderers, drug pushers, homosexuals, and whorehouse madams as heroes and heroines.

One of the leading writers, Ms. Judy Blum, of books for teenage girls is most noted for the sprinkling of profanity and scatological dialogue throughout her stories; our movies, newspapers, magazines, and television alike play on violence, greed, terrorist, lust, adultery, infidelity, and crime; murderers like Charlie Manson are interviewed as celebrities on prime time, and actors and entertainers known for their drug abuse, promiscuity, and bohemian lifestyles are treated by tabloids and serious press people alike as idols and authorities even on the most complex issues of the day.

Even now, the rock group "The Rolling Stones" is touring this country, singing to packed auditoriums and stadiums songs with titles like "Sympathy for the Devil" and "Let's Spend the Night Together."

One might paraphrase Paul to declare that the model advice of today's culture is: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever is lurid, whatsoever is filthy, whatsoever is base, whatsoever is corrupting, whatsoever is low and common and demeaning, whatsoever is unfaithful and unbelieving, glorify this!"

I was not born yesterday. Like Paul, I have a certain degree of sophistication. I know that we are living in an age of far-flung communications and an age of pluralistic values.

I know likewise that the Senate is neither a church nor a monastic community.

But, as a Senator and as a concerned American, I would like to know where we are permitted to draw a line? In this era of tolerance and levelling of all values, is every perversity, every moral deformity, and every degree of looseness to be allowed to flourish without question? Is profanity to be accepted as the aesthetic equivalent of reasoned, circumspect conversation? In the name of freedom of expression and novelty, are we expected to stand idly by while this great country and all that made her the greatest nation in world history are drowned in a rising tide of vulgarity and licentiousness?

Imagine a young child who watches television or attends movies in most American communities.

By the time that child reaches his or her adulthood, how many extramarital affairs has that child witnessed on the soap operas? How many murders? How many drug addicts inserting how many needles into their arms? How many depictions of rape, incest, burglaries, car thefts, assaults, orgies, tortures, and drug sales?

Worse, what kind of interpretation of life and citizenship will that child carry into his or her maturity?

And what kind of citizen will that child become in later life?

How differently did we once nurture the young mind!

For generations, young boys and girls across America learned their values from the old McGuffey's Readers. An examination of just the sixth book in that series is instructive.

There, the young reader could read poems by Shakespeare, Dryden, or William Cullen Bryant; there one read Rip Van Winkle by Washington Irving or A Psalm of Life by Longfellow; there were The Death of Little Nell by Dickens or The Memory of Our Fathers—prose and poetry geared to challenge the mind, massage the conscience, and teach values like courage and patriotism and decency.

In most homes the Scriptures of the Hebrew Bible and the New Testament were learned along with the ABC's and the multiplication table.

In most homes The Ten Commandments were taught and observed as the sine qua non of civilized behavior and acceptable human virtue.

In recent decades the word "Puritanism" has had woven about it the mystique of prudishness, priggery, and pre-Freudian neuroticism.

But historical English Puritanism arose from the reasoned decision of large numbers of thoughtful people in Britain that seventeenth-century public morality had become decadent, perverted, and debauched.

That Puritanism was not about fostering prudery, but about fostering a higher, healthier lifestyle among the people of England.

I see nothing miguided about that kind of Puritanism, and I would welcome its return among us today.

Be that as it may, I think that we as United States Senators have a particular role to play in the moral toning-up of our society today.

Instead of standing quietly by in expected acquiescence to whatever new outrages the cultural elites of this country and Western Europe decree as the new morality, I believe that we have both the prerogative and the responsibility to call into question whatever would degrade or further debase our culture.

We should have no fear of public ridicule from the self-appointed grand viziers of glamor and trendiness if, in both precept and personal example, we lend our prestige to the religious ethic, work ethic, to honesty, to marital fidelity, to decency, to family values, and to the highest standards forged by Western civilization.

Teddy Roosevelt said that the Presidency was a bully pulpit.

The same might be said of a seat in the United States Senate!

Let us, then, not be afraid to call attention to the emperor's lack of clothes when the occasion calls.

Let us remember that, like the Jewish people and the Early Church that Paul knew so well, we too must witness to our Lord.

THE FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I rise today as a cosponsor of H.R. 2978. I strongly support this legislation, which will immediately afford the flag the protection it deserves—protection from physical desecration.

On June 21, 1989, the Supreme Court ruled 5 to 4 that a protester in Texas who burned a U.S. flag should not have been convicted of a crime. This decision overruled State laws against burning the flag in 48 States. I shared my colleague's sense of deep dismay that the Supreme Court did not see fit to protect the flag from desecration.

The decision in Texas versus Johnson focused on a particularly blatant set of circumstances. During the Republican National Convention in Dallas in August 1984, Gregory Johnson participated in a series of demonstrations against the policies of the Reagan administration and the Republican Party. One demonstration, which culminated with a rally at Dallas City Hall, included activity in which Johnson unfurled an American flag, doused it with kerosene and set it on fire. While the flag burned, the protestors chanted "America, the red, white and blue, we spit on you."

Mr. President, every American feels strongly about the flag. In my home State of North Dakota, people of all ages and walks of life have been deeply offended by this incident, and want to restore respect and integrity to the flag. Recently, a high school senior from Hatton, ND, wrote to me to express his concern about the flag-burning controversy. In the letter, he said:

> This is a subject that bothers me a lot. My father is a veteran of the Vietnam War as well as the commander of our local American Legion Post. To see the Supreme Court make it legal to desecrate Old Glory is enough to make the man cry.
> I'm a veteran of sorts too, a veteran of Boys' State. If I or others there learned anything it was that our flag and country are two of the most important parts of American lives.

Mr. President, the flag is certainly an important part of American lives. The American flag is a symbol of the liberty and justice which all citizens of this great country enjoy. School children across the country begin each day by pledging their allegiance to the flag. Millions of men and women have fought under the American flag to ensure that this country remains the land of the free and the home of the brave. Many have sacrificed their lives for the flag, and the republic for which it stands. From Iwo Jima to the Moon, the Star Spangled Banner has proudly flown around the world and beyond, as a symbol of American freedom, bravery, humanity, and pioneering spirit.

I oppose the burning of the American flag, one of this Nation's most precious symbols. I believe that we must protect the flag, just as we have fought to protect the principles upon which this country was founded. Earlier this year, I joined my colleagues to pass Senate Resolution 51, expressing the Senate's disappointment with the Supreme Court ruling. I also supported a later Senate amendment rewritting Federal antidesecration law, making it illegal to display our flag on the floor or ground, or burn, mutilate, or deface our national emblem.

Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the legislation before us today, and I urge my colleagues to support it. According to constitutional scholars, the flag can be protected through Federal legislation such as this bill.

This legislation would make it an offense to knowingly mutilate, physically defile, deface, burn, or trample upon a flag of the United States. The American flag deserves protection from physical desecration, and this bill is the quickest way to ensure that this sacred symbol is protected and maintains its integrity. Mr. President, I urge rapid consideration and passage of this important legislation.

RAOUL WALLENBERG RECOGNITION DAY

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, 8 years ago today, Raoul Wallenberg was made an honorary U.S. citizen. As the Senate sponsor of the resolution giving Wallenberg this status and as a member of the Raoul Wallenberg Committee of the United States, I want to join in paying tribute to this "lost hero of the Holocaust."

At the behest of the U.S. Government, Raoul Wallenberg courageously and selflessly risked his life to save thousands of Hungarian Jews from death at the hands of the Nazis during World War II. His heroic work has proven to be a unique contribution in the history of the salvation of European Jews from the Holocaust. Wallenberg himself, who has not been heard from since January 1945 when he was seized in Budapest by Soviet authorities, has become, for millions of people, a symbol of our deepest humanitarian values.

Over the years, the United States has made several attempts to obtain information from the Soviet Union about Wallenberg's fate. The Soviet Government has repeatedly refused to open the records or to cooperate with any who seek to solve the mystery of his disappearance. Despite mounting evidence that Wallenberg might still have been alive as recently as a few years ago, Soviet authorities continue to insist that Wallenberg died of a heart attack while in a Soviet prison in 1947.

Raoul Wallenberg undertook his humanitarian mission and put his own life in jeopardy at the request of our Government. Without a doubt, the United States has a responsibility to Wallenberg and his family to resolve the question of his fate and to save him as he saved so many others. I have raised the Wallenberg case with Soviet officials on many occasions. I urge the Bush administration to do so as well so that the "lost hero of the Holocaust" will be lost to us no more.

THE FLAG PROTECTION ACT

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I think it is important that during discussion on the American flag, and how best to protect its integrity, we take a step back and reevaluate what we are trying to do, and why.

Every individual in this room is a patriotic American. Each and every one of us respects and values the American flag. If the protection of the flag, and all that it stands for, is our goal, then we, as legislators, I believe, should not undertake legislative action.

In the Bill of Rights we find the most fundamental American values, including the right to freedom of speech, expression, assembly, and religion. All of these rights are an integral part of the history of the United States. In fact, it is on these rights that we base our collective identity as Americans. Our belief in these rights is what makes even the most bitter national debate a unifying and strengthening experience.

The American flag is domestically and internationally, recognized as a symbol of freedom: Freedom to express one's opinions, in speech or print, freedom to worship; freedom from intolerance. Whenever we exercise these freedoms, we reaffirm everything for which the flag stands.

In my view, we in Congress have inadvertently already given a lone protester in Texas far more attention than his protest ever merited. By doing so, we have probably accomplished more than his actions intended, and fulfilled his wildest dreams. He's received his "15 minutes of fame" and considerably more. And yet his act in no way threatened our Nation's confidence in itself and its own strength.

Mr. President, I do not condone or salute the actions of Mr. Gregory Johnson. But I believe he has the right to express himself. In the words of the commonly used expression, I firmly believe he is entitled to his wrong opinion. In a peculiar way, his burning of an American flag actually legitimized, in the strongest manner possible, everything for which our flag stands.

There is no doubt in my mind that the intent of the Senate in this matter is well-meant, and certainly heartfelt. But no matter whether by statute or by amendment, we are stumbling into a morass. How, for example, do we define the term "desecration?" Where does veneration end, and desecration start? If I wear a flag pin, am I defiling the flag? What about bumper stickers with flags on them—which, incidentally, would cover most political election decals? What about works of art that depict the flag? Or cocktail toothpicks with little flags on them?

I think we must recognize that when people wear, or copy, or even pattern hooked rugs after the flag—as patriots did in the 19th century—they often are showing their pride and respect for a symbol they hold dear.

I would also urge caution before approving a constitutional amendment to "correct" Mr. Johnson's unpleasant behavior. The Bill of Rights is a beautifully crafted document. Amending the Bill of Rights, or any part of the Constitution, is a process that should be undertaken with great caution. If we rush to amend the Constitution, without a "cooling-down" period, without careful and thorough examination of what is involved, we risk much that is set forth in the Constitution. With the best of intentions, we could end up doing considerable damage.

Mr. President, I would make just one last point. Simply put, we cannot mandate respect and pride in the flag. It is far better to act from motives of love and respect than out of obedience.

Like many of my colleagues, I am a veteran. Even more importantly, I am a U.S. citizen. I value our flag. But I value far less the cloth of the flag than the beliefs and rights for which it stands. When I fought, I fought for freedom.

The burning of the flag is not, nor ever has been, an imminent threat to national security. Our tolerance of the act of burning the flag—however contempitible that act may be—is an affirmation of our most fundamental values, our strength, and our wisdom.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 10:16 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has agreed to the following resolutions:

H. Res. 251. A resolution amending the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against Walter L. Nixon, a judge of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi; and

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. MCCONNELL, and Mr. SIMPSON) (by request):

S. 1727. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act to provide comprehensive campaign finance reform, to lessen the power of special economic interests and to restore competition to American congressional elections; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

COMPREHENSIVE CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the baseball season is drawing to a close; the regular season had ended and the playoffs are under way. But there is one season that never ends—I'm talking about the political campaign season.

Even in this so-called nonelection year of 1989, many States have already had important special elections, reminding us all how high the stakes can be, and how much preparation it takes to get the job done.

It also reminds us that election day 1990 is only 398 days away. To my coleagues who are up for re-election in 1990, it probably seems even closer. Still, the campaign finance issue remains unsolved.

Today, I am pleased to announce that the Republican Party—under the leadership of President Bush—continues its commitment to campaign reform. I want to underscore that commitment today by introducing President Bush's Comprehensive Campaign Reform Act of 1989. My distinguished colleague from Kentucky—Senator MITCH MCCONNELL—has been our leader on this issue, and I am pleased he is with me to help introduce this important presidential initiative.

THE IMPORTANCE OF COMPETITION

The No. 1 goal of the President's package is to restore competition to congressional elections. Let's face it, politics is all about competition; or at least is should be. But statistics tell us that competition is on the endangered list.

If you are looking for a sure thing, take a look at incumbency on Capitol Hill. During the past decade, incumbents in the U.S. House of Representatives have posted an astounding 97.7 percent re-election rate. We have seen some turnover in the U.S. Senate, but Senators seeking re-election have still won 85 percent of the time. Those are pretty good odds—unless, of course, you are a challenger.

Of the 410 U.S. Representatives who sought re-election in 1988, only 8 were defeated; of those 8, 3 were under indictment, and 1 was actually convicted.

New York Times correspondent Hedrick Smith once wrote—and I quote—"The lack of authentic competition in so many election undermines the essence of representative government"—end quote. If you want to talk about why we need campaign reform, this is the place to start—right here. What we need is more competition, not less.

INCUMBENT ADVANTAGES

Of course, we incumbents enjoy plenty of advantages over any potential challenger. The most visible is the multimillion dollar franking privilege.

THE ABUSE OF THE FRANK

Although there is a legitimate need for reasonable use of the frank, it is no secret that in an election year franked mail pours out of congressional offices, and that almost 90 percent of this mail is unsolicited. A recent study conducted by the Congressional Research Service found that when taken together, the House and Senate sent out nearly four times as much mail—805 million pieces—as they received—210.4 million pieces—during the 1988 fiscal year. The study also found that congressional use of franked mail jumped from $63.6 million to $113.4 million between 1987 and 1988, a 78.3 percent increase in an election year.

The President's plan bans the use of the frank for unsolicited mass mailings, and requires Members to file quarterly reports of the money they spend on franked mail. This provision is not intended to prohibit a Member of Congress from responding to his or her constituents; its purpose is to halt the tidal wave of junk mail that is flooding the taxpayers' mailboxes.

President Bush also takes on another juicy incumbent advantage, and that is the campaign war chest savings plan. The President says it's time to stop incumbents from rolling over excess campaign money from one campaign to the next, and to prevent members from using excess campaign funds for personal use.

GERRYMANDERING

In my view, any meaningful campaign reform package will have to deal with the problem of gerrymandering. Congressional boundaries will be redrawn after the 1990 census and that will have a dramatic impact on the composition of Congress in 1992. The redistricting standards contained in this bill are among the most important provisions in the President's plan.

I firmly believe that this issue must be addressed as part of any meaningful campaign finance reform package. Politicians should not be allowed to manipulate congressional district boundaries as part of some self-serving partisan scheme.

President Bush agrees. His plan features a non-partisan Federal standard for congressional districts that would go a long way toward making congressional races fair and competitive.

STRENGTHENING POLITICAL PARTIES

Another key ingredient in the President's reform package is an initiative which was part of the Congressional Campaign Reform Act of 1989 (S. 7), a bill I introduced with 15 Republican cosponsors this past January. These provisions would strengthen the role of the political parties in Federal elections, a change advocated by a number of neutral, academic observers who study our political system.

In simple terms, the Bush plan raises the cap on the amount of funds parties can give to candidates. This change benefits all candidates, by giving them an opportunity to spend more time raising issues and less time raising money. Stronger political parties also make it easier for challengers to mount credible campaigns with a nest egg free of special interest obligations.

THE DISPROPORTIONATE INFLUENCE OF SPECIAL INTERESTS

No doubt about it, a growing number of Americans are becoming disgusted with a political system that appears to be captive to special interests. In Kansas, we have a strong tradition of grass-roots politics, where the individual can—and does—make a difference. But, here in Washington, the special interests with all their clout and their millions of dollars seem to be the ones calling the shots. Here's why:

The Democratic Party is the majority party on Capitol Hill, a fact not lost on political action committees. PAC directors know the numbers, and they want to bet on winners. They recognize that incumbents are the heavy favorites to win re-election. As a result, most PAC dollars now go to incumbents.

It has even gotten to the point where a candidate's position on the issues has taken a back seat to incumbency in determining where PAC dollars go. PAC directors justify their response to a lopsided system that favors incumbents as earning a good return on their contributors' investment.

A recent article by Brooks Jackson of the Wall Street Journal—Sept. 15, 1989—underscored the importance of PAC dollars to House Democrats. The article showed that while donations to the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee declined by nearly two-thirds in the 12 months ended June 30, political action committees [PAC's] increased their giving during the same period by 18 percent, to $1.9 million.

President Bush has a plan to deal with special interest influence. His proposal bans PAC's sponsored by corporations, labor unions and trade associations, and increases disclosure requirements on so-called soft money contributions and independent expenditures, the kind of contributions that big labor and other well-financed organizations can dump into a campaign without limitation. For the so-called ideological PAC's that are protected under the first amendment's freedom of association, the President would slash the contribution limits from $5,000 per candidate per election to $2,500 per candidate per election.

INCREASED DISCLOSURE

The first amendment guarantees each American the right to freedom of speech. The Supreme Court has held that political expenditures are a form of political speech. But, if we are genuinely concerned about the level of money in the political system, we need to know where the dollars come from and how they are being spent. Under these circumstances, disclosure is the best solution.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, George Bush has taken the lead in the campaign finance reform debate with this initiative.

By curbing the influence of the special interests, reducing incumbent advantages, strengthening political parties and increasing the level of competition in congressional elections without shifting the burden of campaign reform onto the backs of the American taxpayers, George Bush has developed a comprehensive reform plan that would go a long way toward restoring public confidence in the current campaign financing system.

I look forward to a lively discussion of these proposals in the Senate Rules Committee and on the Senate floor.

I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis, the letter of transmittal, and a press release of the White House appear with the text of the bill in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(b) The second paragraph (relating to congressional redistricting) of the Act entitled "An Act for the relief of Doctor Ricardo Vallejo Samala and to provide for Congressional redistricting" approved December 14, 1967 (2 U.S.C. 2c) is repealed, and in lieu thereof the following sections are added:

"(c) In each State entitled in the 103rd Congress or in any subsequent Congress to more than one Representative under an apportionment made pursuant to the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, there shall be established in the manner provided by the law thereof a number of districts equal to the number of Representatives to which such State is so entitled, and Representatives shall be elected only by eligible voters from districts so established, no district to elect more than one Representative. Such districts shall be established in accordance with the provisions of this Act as soon as practicable after the decennial census date established in section 141(a) of title 13, United States Code, but in no case later than such time as is reasonably sufficient for their use in the elections for the 103rd Congress and in each fifth Congress thereafter.

"(d) The number of persons in Congressional districts within each State shall be as nearly equal as is practicable, as determined under the then most recent decennial census. The enumeration established according to the Federal decennial census pursuant to Article I, Section II, United States Constitution, shall be the sole basis of population for the establishment of Congressional districts.

"(f) Congressional districts shall not be established with the intent and effect of diluting the voting strength of any person, group of persons, or members of any political party.

"(k) Nothing in this section shall be construed to supersede any provision of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, as amended.

"(l) Any State may establish by Law criteria for implementing the standards set forth in this section. Nothing in this section shall be construed as limiting the power of a State to strengthen or add to these standards, nor to interpret these standards in a manner consistent with the Law of the State, to the extent that such additional criteria or interpretations are not in conflict with this section.".

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the district court shall have authority to issue all judgments, orders, and decrees necessary to ensure that any criteria established by State law pursuant to this section are not in conflict with the section.

(3) With the exception of actions brought under subsection (c)(2), the district court for the purposes of this section shall be a three-judge district court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2284. Upon motion of any party in accordance with 28 U.S.C. § 1657, it shall be the duty of the district court to assign the case for briefing and hearing at the earliest practicable date, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited. (4) For the purposes of this section, an order dismissing a complaint for failure to state a cause of action shall be appealable in accordance with 28 U.S.C. § 1253.

(5) If the district court fails to establish a briefing and hearing schedule that will permit resolution of the case prior to the next general election, any party may seek a writ of mandamus from the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit in which the district court sits. The court of appeals shall have jurisdiction over the motion for a writ of mandamus and shall establish an expedited briefing and hearing schedule for resolution of the motion. Such a motion shall not stay proceedings in the district court.

(6) If the district court determines that the districts established by the State's redistricting authority pursuant to this Act are not in compliance with this Act, the court shall remand the plan to the State's redistricting authority to establish new districts consistent with section 11. The district court shall retain jurisdiction over the case after remand.

(7) If, after remand in accord with subsection (6) of this section, the district court determines that the districts established by the State's redistricting authority under the remand order are not consistent with section 11, the district court shall enter an order establishing districts that are consistent with section 11 of this Act for the next general congressional election.

(8) If any question of state law arises in a case under this section that would require abstention, the district court shall not abstain. However, in any State permitting certification of such questions, the district court shall certify that question to the highest court of the state whose law is in question. Such certification shall not stay proceeding in the district court.

(9) With the exception of actions brought under subsection (c)(2), an appeal from a decision of the district court under this section shall be taken in accord with 28 U.S.C. § 1253. An appeal under this section shall be noticed in the district court and perfected by docketing in the Supreme Court within 30 days of the entry of judgment below. Appeals brought to the Supreme Court under this subsection shall be heard as soon as practicable.

(10) For purposes of this section, "redistricting authority" shall mean the officer, officers, public body, public bodies, or any combination thereof, having initial responsibility for the Congressional redistricting of each State.".

(d) The first sentence of section 1657 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out "or" and inserting in lieu thereof "any action under section 11 of the Comprehensive Campaign Reform Act of 1989, or".

SEVERABILITY

SEC. 12. If any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act, or the application of any such provision to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of any other such provision, and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 13. Unless otherwise stated herein, this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall become effective on November 7, 1990 and shall apply to all contributions and expenditures made after such date.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. This section provides that the title of the Act will be "The Comprehensive Campaign Reform Act of 1989."

Section 2. Limitation on Political Action Committees.

This section eliminates the exception in law which permits the organization of political committees connected to corporations, unions or trade associations.

It prohibits the use of any corporate, union or trade association funds for the purpose of paying any of the costs of "non-connected" or independent political committees.

It decreases by half the amount "non-connected" political committees may give to candidates from $5000 to $2500 per election.

Section 3. Limitations On Leadership PACs.

This section limits contributions to so-called "Leadership PACs" by including the amount of contributions to such PACs toward the total given to the campaign committee of the candidate or federal officer holder associated with such PACs, for the purposes of determining contribution limits under the Federal Election Campaign Act. This will prevent "double" contributions by individuals and political committees to the same candidate. These new restrictions would apply to Presidential as well as Congressional candidates.

This section also closes the loophole that permits transfers between candidate committees.

Section 4. Protections For Employees.

This section deals with the problem of coercion in "bundling" by intermediaries or conduits.

It prohibits any intermediary or conduit from delivering or arranging to have delivered contributions from more than two persons who are employees of the same employer or members of the same labor organization or trade association.

This section also codifies the Supreme Court decision in Beck and sets forth the following rights:

Employees cannot be obligated to pay for the political activities of their union through membership dues;

Employees who choose to pay agency fees are only obligated to pay for the cost of the collective bargaining services the union provides;

Employers who choose to pay membership dues have the right to have their dues reduced by a pro rata share of the amount the union spends out of the membership treasury on political activities; and,

Employees must be informed of the amount of the full membership dues and related fees; the amount of reduced fees; and the cost of the political activities.

Unions are required to disclose these rights their members.

Section 5. Disclosure of Independent Expenditures.

This section increases the disclosure requirements of unauthorized independent expenditures. Information regarding the sponsorship of such an advertisement would have to be given at the beginning and the end of the communication; would have to be clearly readable or audible; and, would have to include the statement that it is not authorized by any candidate.

Section 6. Increased Role For Political Parties.

This section increases by 150% the amount a national, State or local committee of a political party may contribute to federal elections through coordinated expenditures.

Section 7. Excess Campaign Funds Prohibitions.

This section prohibits the rollover of excess campaign funds into the next election cycle; eliminates the "grandfather clause" that allows some members of Congress to convert excess funds to personal use; prohibits Senators from supplementing their official accounts with excess funds; and, requires that any excess funds be returned pro-rata to contributors, be given to national, State or local party committees, or be used to retire the federal debt.

Section 8. Tightening Enforcement.

This section repeals the shortened 3-year statute of limitations for violations of the Act and returns to the general 5-year statute of limitations.

It also permits the Attorney General to have access to FEC compliance files pursuant to a criminal investigation or trial.

Section 9. Limitations on Congressional Frank.

This section bans the use of the congressional frank for unsolicited mass mailings and requires quarterly reports by Members of Congress and Senators of the amounts spent on franked mail.

Section 10. Soft Money Disclosure and Allocation.

This section requires the disclosure of all soft money accounts by all political committees regulated by the FEC. It also requires political parties, corporations and labor organizations to allocate the costs of general political activities affecting the election of federal and non-federal candidate between their federal and non-federal accounts.

Section 11. Limitations On Gerrymandering.

This section sets out new standards for congressional reapportionment and redistricting. It codifies current case law and maintains previous statutory requirements that congressional districts be of equal population, and be contiguous and compact in form. It repeals current statutory provisions to the extent that they may permit multimember congressional districts, and reiterates a requirement of single-member congressional districts. New subsections would also limit the division of county and political subdivision boundary lines, as well as restricting egregious partisan gerrymandering.

It expresses the intent that the congressional redistricting process be open and subject to public scrutiny, and provides for equal access to federally funded census materials.

It also provides that nothing in the Act shall be construed as superseding any provision of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, as amended. Accordingly, the Act supplements the Voting Rights Act.

Finally, it establishes an expedited federal judicial review procedure of the congressional redistricting process, and gives the federal courts exclusive jurisdiction to enforce the standards set out in the Act.

Section 13. Severability.

If any portion of this Act is held invalid, the remaining portions of the Act shall continue in full force and effect.

Section 14. Effective Date.

This Act is effective November 7, 1990.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to submit for your consideration and enactment the "Comprehensive Campaign Finance Reform Act of 1989." This legislative proposal would implement the reforms I announced earlier this summer. It represents comprehensive campaign finance reform legislation designed to reduce substantially the power of special economic interests, while enhancing the role of individuals and political parties. The proposal also restores competition to Congressional elections by reducing the advantages of incumbency.

I look forward to working with Congress on these critical issues.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 26, 1989.

[From the White House Office of the Press Secretary, Sept. 26, 1989]

FACTSHEET ON THE COMPREHENSIVE CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM ACT OF 1989

Today the President transmitted to Congress comprehensive campaign finance reform legislation designed to lessen the power of special economic interests and restore competition to American Congressional elections. This legislative proposal implements the reforms already announced by the President.

While curtailing the influence of special economic interests, the proposal enhances the roles of individuals and the political parties in the electoral process. It is also designed to reform a system which has led to a "permanent Congress". In the 1980s, House incumbents have had a 97.7 percent reelection rate and Senate incumbents an 85 percent reelection rate. Below is an outline of the major proposals:

Elimination of political action committees (PACs) supported by corporations, unions or trade associations, and a prohibition on any such entities paying for the overhead or administrative costs of any independent PAC.

Reforms to address the problem of the "permanent Congress" by reducing the unwarranted advantages of incumbency. Specifically, the proposal would prohibit the personal use of excess campaign funds, drastically reduce congressional franked mailings, ban the rollover of campaign funds from one election cycle to the next, and legislate fair neutral criteria for the redistricting that will follow the 1990 census.

A strengthening of political parties by increasing the amounts they can spend on behalf of congressional candidates. This source of funds would permit legislators to spend less time fundraising, would ensure that challengers have greater resources with which to challenge incumbents, and would further limit the role of special economic interests in elections.

Full disclosure of all "soft money" spent by the political parties and all labor unions, corporations, and trade associations to influence a federal election.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I am here this morning to commend the President of the United States and the Republican leader for their interest in and leadership on the subject of campaign finance reform.

Having been involved in the formulation of the President's bill, I might say that I think it is a very effective approach to the question of campaign finance reform. As a student of this issue over the last 5 years, and for a period of time as a professor on a part-time basis in college on this very subject, it seems to me that of all the various proposals that have been presented, the President's bill is probably the best.

Nevertheless, when we talk about campaign finance reform, we, of course, are talking about the rules of the game. In our democracy and in our strong two-party system, each side would love to write the rules in a way that would benefit their cause. So at some point, obviously, there must be a compromise.

It seems to me that there are a number of significant measures in this particular field of campaign finance reform that could be addressed on a bipartisan basis. I hope at some point we will get to that stage. Maybe it has already begun.

The Senator from Nevada, Senator REID, and I, introduced last week a proposal that we think does not tilt the playing field either way against either party, and would provide for meaningful campaign finance reform.

Nevertheless, whatever we do I hope at some point we will do something, because I do not think that any of us are satisfied with the status quo in this particular field of campaign finance reform.

But principally this morning I am here to commend the President of the United States for his leadership, to state that I think his proposal that Senator DOLE and I are introducing this morning is truly an outstanding one.

The bill is an urgently needed new bill: The President's election and campaign reform bill.

For a number of years, Congress has talked about lack of competitiveness in the world market. But one of the biggest problems in this country today is the lack of competitiveness in Congress.

Over the last several years, the reelection rate to the House has been over 95 percent. There is more political competition in the Soviet Politburo than there is in the United States House of Representatives.

This is because of unfair election practices like black market soft money and gerrymandered electoral districts.

For too long, Congress has been playing a game of protectionist politics—using the campaign finance rules and the advantages of incumbency to shut out the competition.

What the President is proposing in this bill is fair play in the political marketplace. He is urging the elimination of special interest PAC's, which fund incumbents overwhelmingly over challengers.

The bill requires public disclosure of the millions of dollars spent each year by unions, corporations, and parties in the form of soft money and independent expenditures.

Further, the President's bill requires unions to let their members know if they are using union dues for political activities; and gives workers a right not to pay for political operations they object to.

Finally, this bill sets some minimum standards of fairness with regard to redistricting. It is time to redraw the electoral lines to abolish the old-fashioned political fiefdoms in Congress.

In introducing President Bush's election reform bill, I fully expect it to come under fire from those with a vested interest in maintaining the current system.

Some people benefit a great deal from the current system, and they are well-insulated from any kind of political competition because of the present rules of the game.

The President's bill, however, would strip away their insulation, and expose them to potentially tough competition.

Some people won't like that. But competition, after all, is what Americ a is all about—competition in business, in sports, even in the arts.

It is time to rewrite the rules of the election game to make Congress a competitive playing field once again.

I commend the President and the Republican leader for taking an interest in this issue, which has been one of my major concerns since long before I came to this body.

By Mr. THURMOND (for himself, Mr. HELMS, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. SANFORD):

S. 1728. A bill to provide disaster assistance to timber producers who suffered losses of trees due to Hurricane Hugo to help them reestablish private timber stands; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

HUGO FORESTRY RESTORATION ACT

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation which will help reforest the many thousands of acres of timberland destroyed when Hurricane Hugo passed through South Carolina, North Carolina, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

The distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], and the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD], join me in the introduction of this bill.

This storm caused damage unseen in modern history. Approximately 36 percent, or 4.4 million acres, of the 12.2 million acres of forested land in South Carolina were damaged. Of the 46 counties in my State, 23 suffered significant timber damage and 7 of those are classified as extensively damaged. Estimates are that Hugo damaged a total of 6.7 billion board feet of sawtimber. Since South Carolina normally harvests only 2.2 billion board feet annually, it would take 3 years under normal conditions for loggers to cut this amount of timber. Approximately 660,000 homes could be built with the volume of sawtimber damaged. This would be enough timber to house nearly all of the population of West Virginia or the city of Philadelphia. The 30,000 South Carolinians employed in the forest industry will suffer for many years from this catastrophe.

Mr. President, from these examples you can see that this hurricane caused serious damage to our forests and natural resources. The legislation I am introducing today is similar to the Forestry Incentive Program [FIP], which provides land owners who cut timber an incentive to replant trees. Specifically, this bill would authorize $100 million to aid the land owners in their reforestation efforts and be administered through the local Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service offices. Land owners would have until December 31, 1995, to apply for funds under this program.

Financial assistance will be provided on a cost-share basis between the Federal Government and the land owner. For persons owning less than 1,000 acres, assistance could be as much as 75 percent of the total cost of implementing eligible practices. For owners of more than 1,000 acres, cost-share could be as much as 50 percent of the total cost of the recommended practices.

Land owners who apply for assistance for site preparation and reforestation will have to complete a forest management plan in consultation with the State forest service. Currently, this practice is required for the FIP and helps assure that the forests are restored in a beneficial manner.

This bill is needed to help renew the natural resources destroyed from Hurricane Hugo. Without this assistance, the natural resources will suffer severe hardships. I look forward to expeditious considerations of this important issue.

Mr. President, I might say that we requested the Agriculture Department to prepare this legislation, and they kindly did this.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1728

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled.

SECION 1. SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Hugo Forestry Restoration Act."

SEC. 2. COST-SHARE ASSISTANCE.—(a) The Secretary of Agriculture shall develop and implement a tree planting reimbursement program to provide financial assistance to owners of private timber stands that were damaged, as determined by the Secretary, in 1989 by Hurricane Hugo. This assistance shall only be made available in those counties and contiguous counties declared by the President to be disaster areas as a result of damage caused by Hurricane Hugo in South Carolina, North Carolina, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands. The purpose of such program is to encourage tree owners to reestablish their damaged stands with commercial tree seedlings for the production of timber and related products. Practices which shall be eligible for assistance are: (1) reforestation of damaged stands, (2) site preparation, and (3) other timber stand reestablishment practices as may be prescribed by the Secretary.

(b) For the purpose of this Act, the term "private timber stands" means trees existing prior to Hurricane Hugo which would have become suitable for commercial harvest for the production of wood or related products. Such trees must have been owned prior to the damage, and must, at the time the request for assistance is made, be owned by any private individual, group, Indian tribe or other native group, association, corporation, or other legal entity, except agencies of Federal, State, or local governments.

(c) A request for assistance shall only be approved by the Secretary after individual forest management plans have been developed by the tree owner in cooperation with, and approved by, the State forester or equivalent State official. The Secretary shall encourage States to use private agencies, consultants, organizations, and firms to the extent feasible for the preparation of individual forest management plans.

(d) The Secretary shall agree to share the cost of those practices for which the Secretary determines that cost-share assistance is appropriate. The portion of such cost (including labor) to be shared shall be that portion of the cost that the Secretary determines is necessary and appropriate.

(e) Requests for assistance under this Act must be filed with the Secretary not later than December 31, 1995.

(f)(1) For any person owning 1,000 or less acres of land planted to trees, regardless of their type, size or condition, assistance made available under this Act shall be limited to 75 percent of the total cost of implementing eligible practices.

(2) For any person owning more than 1,000 acres of land planted to trees, regardless of their type size or condition, assistance made available under this Act shall be limited to 50 percent of the total cost of implementing eligible practices.

(3) For the purpose of this subsection, the Secretary shall issue regulations defining the term "person" which shall conform, to the extent practicable, to the regulations defining the term "person" issued under section 1001 of the Food Security Act of 1985, as amended.

(g) The Secretary may use the facilities, services, authorities, and funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation to carry out the provisions of this Act, except that the Secretary may not use funds of the Corporation for such purpose unless the Corporation has received funds to cover such expenditures from appropriations made to carry out this Act.

(h) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed 100 million dollars to remain available until expended to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(i) The Secretary or the Commodity Credit Corporation shall issue regulations to implement the provisions of this Act as soon as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act, without regard to the requirement for notice and public participation in rule making prescribed in section 553 of title 5, United States Code, or in any directive of the Secretary.

By Mr. LEAHY (for himself, Mr. LUGAR, and Mr. KERREY):

S. 1729. A bill to amend the Commodity Exchange Act to reauthorize such act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

FUTURES TRADING PRACTICES ACT

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, in the past 9 months, regulation of the futures industry has suffered a nervous breakdown. Last January, the Justice Department's sting operation directed at the Chicago futures markets hit the front pages. In February, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission's critical rule report criticized audit trails systems. In April, 22 Chicago bond traders were charged with "ginzy" trading. In May, 59 New York exchange members' records were subpoenaed. In July there was the Chicago emergency, in August the indictments of 46 Chicago traders and in September the GAO report of deep flaws in exchange audit trail systems.

The events add up to one inescapable conclusion—the system is not working. Rules are being ignored; customers are not being protected. We will not allow the crimes of a few to damage the futures markets. These markets are simply too essential a part of our national economy for us to stand by and allow this to happen. Without the public's trust, the markets can no longer function. They can no longer serve the needs of our country. Today, that trust is damaged.

White collar crime has reached epidemic proportions in America. We will not tolerate it—on Wall Street, LaSalle Street, or Main Street. Criminals will be punished. Weak laws will be strengthened. Law enforcement officials will be given the tools to crack down. Senator LUGAR and I are today introducing the "Futures Trading Practices Act of 1989." It is a bipartisan, comprehensive package of reforms designed to restore faith in futures markets. This bill is tough, but fair. It is a code of conduct that any honest trader can live by.

But let me make it clear: Any floor trader caught cheating will be severely punished. Any exchange not policing its floor will be forced to clean up its act. The Commission will be given the money and tools to police the exchanges. I expect them to use these tools to the full extent allowed by law. This is their duty. There is no other course of action.

This bill was written following a comprehensive and exhaustive review of futures regulation by the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry. The committee held four public hearings, received written comments from scores of individuals and groups, reviewed thousands of pages of CFTC documents, and directed GAO to undertake a major study of trading practices. We consulted with Chicago U.S. attorney Anton Valukas on the undercover investigation of those markets. Finally, in drafting this bill, we informally tapped the knowledge of experts at GAO, the CFTC, and in the futures industry.

This bill is tough and not everyone will agree with all its language. It imposes costs and liabilities. It demands an overhaul of trading practices some of which date back 100 years. Controversy will be inevitable.

We have kept one goal consistently in mind—design a workable system that is efficient, effective and fair.

Among other things, the legislation takes these basic steps:

First, beef up the CFTC enforcement powers, boost its funding authority by 50 percent over 5 years, and expand its power to charge service fees;

Second, require the exchanges to install new audit trails able to record the times of trades "independently, precisely, and completely" as proposed by GAO;

Third, through a new system of "deficiency orders" backed by stiff penalties, expand CFTC's powers to demand prompt improvements in exchange oversight, compliance, and disciplinary programs;

Fourth, if an exchange fails to prevent abuses, dual trading will be barred. If the public interest would be harmed, the CFTC could impose other "deficiency order" remedies;

Fifth, allow punitive damage recoveries against traders by customers. Awards up to twice the actual loss in civil lawsuits and arbitrations will be allowed. Retail brokerage firms will be made accountable for the violations of floor brokers they choose to execute orders;

Sixth, authorize the exchanges to conduct limited undercover operations to investigate suspected abuses; and

Seventh, require the exchange to open their governing systems to public participation and to bar insider deals.

This is tough medicine for a tough time. Tough medicine is necessary if the futures industry can regain the public's confidence. We cannot avoid action.

I plan to move this bill fast. On October 17, the Agriculture Committee will hold a hearing on the bill and I plan to move it through the Senate this year.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the provisions of the Futures Trading Practices Act of 1989 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY ON THE FUTURES TRADING PRACTICES ACT OF 1989—KEY ELEMENTS

I. BEEFING UP THE CFTC

The Act authorizes a 50 percent budget increase for the CFTC over five years (adjusted for inflation and annual government-wide salary increases). Authorized funding would rise from $41 million in FY 1990 to $66 million in FY 1994.

These added resources would make possible greater CFTC presence on trading floors, stengthened oversight of exchange self-regulatory programs, heightened monitoring of computer technology, and more staff to develop and prosecute enforcement actions.

The CFTC may establish a pay system comparable to federal bank regulators and the SEC under pending new legislation. This would help the CFTC retain skilled personnel, particularly in regional offices suffering high turnover. The CFTC could not implement this new authority without Congressional review.

The CFTC today is a "permanent" federal agency, and the five-year extension will give it a chance to put needed reforms in place. We will hold annual oversight hearings on the CFTC's progress in this effort and we will make any legislative changes needed along the way.

Service fees

To help finance this funding boost, the Act expands the CFTC's authority to charge service fees reflecting its cost in monitoring trading floors and insuring compliance by exchanges with self-regulatory standards. The CFTC could consider phasing in fee increases to accommodate other up-front costs required by this bill, particularly for with regard to new audit trail systems.

II. NEXT GENERATION AUDIT TRAIL TECHNOLOGY

The futures industry has committed itself to developing this technology; Congress must insist that it be done.

This legislation requires each futures exchange to implement within three years a new audit trails capable of capturing transaction times independently, precisely, and completely as proposed in GAO's recent study.

The CFTC, with GAO comments, would report to Congress within two years on the progress of exchanges in installing the new systems, including their advice on whether the timetable or statutory standards need adjustment.

III. EXCHANGE ACCOUNTABILITY

The bill greatly expands the CFTC's power to force exchanges to improve their trade practice oversight and disciplinary systems.

The CFTC would be required to assess each exchange system—including both the audit trail as well as other floor oversight and compliance efforts—on a two-year cycle. If the CFTC finds flaws at any time, it can issue an interim "deficiency order"—which becomes final under expedited procedures—requiring that corrections be made under a CFTC-set timetable. If the exchange violates this order, it becomes subject to possible suspension or revocation of its license to operate and to penalities of fines up to $500,000 per violation and a cease and desist order; it is violates the cease and desist order, fines escalate up to $500,000 per day.

Under this system, the CFTC could require an exchange—

1. To institute improvements in its trade monitoring, compliance, or disciplinary systems needed to bring it into compliance with self-regulatory standards;
2. Satisfy objective performance criteria for compliance wih those standards;
3. Hire additional staff or deploy or upgrade technology;
4. Suspend dual trading where appropriate; or
5. Remove particular officers, directors, staff or committee members after a hearing on the record if they have willfully abused their authority, failed in their regulatory duties, or rendered themselves unfit.

The CFTC could also delay approval of new contracts for an exchange while a deficiency order is in effect.

Dual trading

During the first year after enactment, the CFTC must suspend dual trading at each exchange under a deficiency order unless the exchange demonstrates that its trade oversight system, including the audit trail, can and does detect dual trading-related abuses. If defects do exist but there is substantial likelihood that a dual trading suspension would harm the public interest, then the CFTC would impose other "deficiency order" remedies. The CFTC can fashion the dual trading suspension to the particular circumstances of the affected exchange.

IV. EXCHANGE "SUNSHINE"

The legislation requires that exchanges and registered futures associations open their governing procedures to a broad crosssection of market and public interests and that conflicts of interest and insider deals be prevented.

Board of directors

Exchange boards would be required to include meaningful representation of such interests as brokerage firms, producers and consumers of commodities traded on the exchange, floor traders and brokers. At least 20 percent of the board must be qualified non-member public directors.

Disciplinary panels

Major disciplinary panels must be diverse enough to ensure fairness and prevent special treatment or preference in disciplinary proceedings and assessment of penalties. Where appropriate for fairness—such as where an exchange director or disciplinary committee member is the subject of a proceeding or where price manipulation is alleged—non-members of the exchange must be included.

Conflict of interest

The bill adopts two key CFTC staff proposals made after the 1979/1980 silver market crisis designed to prevent conflict of interest in exchange emergencies (such as the July Chicago soybean order): (1) Exchange directors must abstain from any matter were they, or a close associate, are a direct, specific party in interest. (2) Before any emergency deliberation, board or committee members must disclose positions in the market, including positions held to their knowledge in accounts at affiliated firms. The board would then take full, knowing responsibility for deciding whether the "interested directors" may participate. Exchanges also must prevent insiders from exploiting official access to non-public information for personal gain.

Members with disciplinary records

Members having violated federal commodity laws or other rules reflecting on their fitness are barred from serving on exchange oversight or disciplinary panels for an appropriate time as defined by the CFTC.

V. CIVIL LIABILITY/PUNITIVE DAMAGES

The legislation allows customers victimized by floor traders willfully and intentionally breaking the rules to sue for recovery and punitive damages of up to double the amount of their actual losses (triple damages altogether) in private lawsuits or reparations claims. Arbitration systems under NFA (National Futures Association) and exchanges must also provide for punitive damages where appropriate.

Accountability of brokerage firms

The Act clarifies that in a lawsuit brought by an aggrieved customer, a retail brokerage firm (futures commission merchant) is responsible to the customer for any losses caused by the malfeasance of a floor broker it selects to execute that customer's order on the exchange floor. If the brokerage firm willfully and intentionally failed to exercise due diligence in selecting the floor broker or monitoring the trade, it would pay punitive damages as well.

Customer notification

Exchanges will be required to notify victimized customers whenever the exchange takes final disciplinary action against a member-floor broker or trader for floor trading violations so that the customer will know to begin exploring legal action.

Class action suits

The CFTC is authorized to adopt rules providing for class action suits under the reparations system if it decides that it can manage the resource burden involved in such complex cases and that it can provide a useful forum for these actions compared with federal court.

VI. PENALTIES

The legislation stiffens penalties for wrongdoers by:

1. Authorizing the CFTC to assess fines against rule violators of the higher of $100,000 (the current ceiling) or triple the monetary gain per violation;
2. Extending criminal penalties to those who willfully provide false information to self-regulators (such as by making fraudulent audit trail entries) or who willfully violate CFTC rules;
3. Raising top civil penalties against exchanges from $100,000 to $500,000 per violation;
4. Including restitution to customers as a penalty which the CFTC could impose against defendants in CFTC enforcement actions;
5. Updating commodity anti-fraud laws to make standards consistent among regulated entities;
6. Incorporating two ideas proposed by the CFTC in response to Chairman Leahy's 11 reform suggestions from March 9, 1989, expanding its flexibility to assess tough penalties against those who violate the rules or fail to pay fines.

Penalties Study/Guidelines

Within one year, the CFTC must report to Congress on a study of penalties assessed for trade practice violations. The study would—

a. Analyze whether systematic differences exist in penalties assessed by different exchanges and why, and

b. Propose guidelines to assure that exchange and CFTC penalties are consistent, including possibly minimum penalties or penalty ranges for various offenses.

VII. BROKER ASSOCIATIONS

All trade, business, or financial affiliations among or between floor brokers and traders, such as partnerships, cost-, profit-, or capital-sharing agreements, or other joint arrangements, must be disclosed to the exchange and the CFTC. Beginning in 270 days, trading among broker-group members, including customer order executions, would be barred unless the CFTC adopts rules governing such trading which it certifies to Congress will inhibit abuses.

Oral orders

Also after 270 days, orders on exchange floors for member-for-member trades would be barred unless the CFTC adopts rules governing this practice which it certifies to Congress will likewise inhibit abuses.

VIII. UNDERCOVER INVESTIGATIONS

The legislation gives the CFTC direct authority to conduct limited undercover investigations where it has reason to believe that violations of the commodity exchange act may be taking place and the Justice Department has declined to do so. The CFTC would be required to inform the Department of Justice before initiating any such investigation; in conducting the investigation, the CFTC would seek to work with other relevant law enforcement officials as appropriate.

IX. FLOOR TRADER REGISTRATION

As proposed by the CFTC, floor traders would be required to register and undergo fitness checks, including fingerprinting and FBI background investigations.

X. HOUSE PROVISIONS/CFTC, GAO, NFA PROPOSALS

The legislation incorporates a number of proposals from H.R. 2869, the Commodity Futures Improvements Act of 1989 recently passed by the House of Representatives. These include provisions on telemarketing fraud, requirements that futures industry professionals attend periodic ethics training sessions, and the mandated GAO study of delivery points in agricultural futures markets. The legislation expands the proposed GAO study to include an examination of the feasibility and relative merits of cash delivery for agricultural contracts and the special concerns raised by the presence of multinational firms with global delivery needs in these markets.

Also included are proposals by the CFTC to authorize greater cooperation in international enforcement investigations and to amend venue and service of process rules in certain futures litigations.

As requested by GAO, the GAO is given explicit access to data maintained by futures self-regulators under the same confidentiality restrictions as the CFTC.

Finally, the legislation incorporates two proposals by the National Futures Association to tighten registration standards and to allow NFA to appeal certain rulings of the CFTC.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator LEAHY in introducing the Futures Trading Practices Act of 1989.

The credibility of U.S. futures markets has been eroded as a result of the events in the last 9 months. The credibility of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission and its effectiveness to deal strongly with this industry has been called into question by the General Accounting Office and others acknowledgeable about futures issues.

Against this background, the Senate Agriculture Committee must reauthorize the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. In doing so, we have undertaken efforts with this legislation to strengthen the regulatory authority of that agency and restore public confidence in the U.S. futures markets.

Our actions to shore up confidence in this system are extremely important to the well-being of the entire U.S. economy. These markets serve as the risk transfer and price discovery mechanisms upon which commerce, both domestically and abroad, depend. For many years, most of the major agricultural commodities grown in this country have traded on U.S. futures such as Treasury bonds has been remarkable.

The CFTC reauthorization effort has undergone a considerable transformation since the beginning of this year. In January I was prepared to launch the reauthorization effort with the introduction of a simple reauthorization bill. In the intervening months, however, the markets have been buffeted by indictments and conflict of interest charges.

This past spring, the FBI announced indictments of futures traders in Chicago. This undercover operation was conducted by the FBI over the course of 18 months by agents posing as brokers in the trading pits of the largest futures exchanges. Agents observed first hand the trading practices and techniques utilized on exchange floors. Evidence gathered during this investigation resulted in the filing of 4 indictments implicating 46 traders. Of those traders indicted, 20 traders came from one particular pit—representing nearly 10 percent of the traders in that pit. Testimony received from the FBI suggests that the trading abuses may extend far beyond the indictments issued thus far.

The markets suffered an additional setback when in July the liquidation of the soybean contract became the focus of charges of market manipulation and self dealing. The Chicago Board of Trade instituted an emergency order calling for all traders having positions in the July soybean contract in excess of 3 million bushels to liquidate their positions by 20 percent per day. This emergency order had the effect of forcing the sale of millions of bushels of soybeans by the largest holder of July soybean futures contracts, resulting in a price decline of nearly $1 per bushel over a 1-week period of time. Concerns were immediately raised about the composition of the Chicago Board of Trade panel that recommended and instituted the emergency order. A review of the positions held by the members of that panel demonstrated that a significant number of those members held positions or their firms had positions for customers that benefited from a price decline.

The Agriculture Committee has received testimony and input from the CFTC, the General Accounting Office and several commodities exchanges, and has been provided a great deal of background and insight into the issues that have emerged as focal points of this debate. This bill attempts to correct deficiencies in the statute or regulatory practices to address concerns such as inefficient audit trails, dual trading, and self dealing.

In our last hearing, the GAO testified that the trade monitoring controls and procedures currently used in the markets provide dishonest floor participants with the opportunity to cheat customers. GAO made recommendations to the committee on the types of changes that could be employed to vastly reduce those opportunities for trading abuses. Many of those recommendations are included in this bill.

Without question, the most important aspect of this bill is the requirement that the exchanges develop an audit trail that will capture the trade data necessary to detect and thus deter trading abuses. Within 3 years from the date of enactment, audit trails will be required to record the essential data of a trade, including the time the trade is executed, in a manner that cannot be altered. The Chicago investigations and indictments pointed to the need for a better method of recording trading activity, and the GAO report outlined the benefits a detailed audit trail system will bring to the ability of the CFTC to carry out its regulatory function.

The bill greatly expands the authority of the CFTC to oversee exchanges and make changes in methods of monitoring trade practices. The CFTC would be required to assess and determine the effectiveness of the trade monitoring system used by an exchange to detect trading abuses. The bill provides the CFTC with the authority to order exchanges to make corrections in their trade monitoring systems, and to set specific time limits for exchange compliance with such orders. Penalties of $500,000, which could escalate to $500,000 per day, are designed to encourage exchange compliance with CFTC directives.

Within 1 year from enactment of the bill, dual trading will be suspended unless the CFTC determines that the exchange's trade monitoring system has the ability to detect trading abuses. This provides further incentive for contract markets to develop and implement effective trade monitoring systems while putting the onus on proof on the traders who engage in this dubious endeavor.

The bill provides the CFTC with the authority to conduct its own undercover investigations on the various futures exchanges. The Chicago investigations provided a clear example of the value of this authority.

To address concerns about conflicts of interest on exchange and futures association governing boards, the bill requires a diversity of interests on those governing boards. The bill also contains provisions to ensure that members of governing boards do not participate when the member knows that he or she is a party to the subject under deliberations.

To ensure that the futures markets continue to perform their historical function, the bill instructs the GAO to conduct a study of delivery points and mechanisms on agricultural futures. This study is intended to explore the relationship between cash and futures prices in order to determine the effectiveness of the current delivery system. The independent analysis of GAO will provide significant insight into a system that so greatly impacts cash prices received by U.S. farmers.

The bill requires complete disclosure of any association between brokers to address concerns of secret dealings. The bill also requires that trading among brokers groups be banned unless the CFTC adopts rules to govern this trading practice.

Finally, in order to carry out the additional regulatory mandates of the bill we increase funding authority by 50 percent for the CFTC over the next 4 years. An increase in the size of the CFTC is justified, indeed absolutely necessary then you consider that since the last reauthorization trade volume has increased from 216 million contracts in 1986 to over 321 million contracts in 1989, as 48-percent increase. The number of CFTC staff years over the same period increased by only 9.5 percent.

The bill however is also mindful of the budget impact of such an increase. Accordingly, the bill provides authority for fees to be charged for services provided by the CFTC to the exchanges. These fees are to be reflective of the CFTC's cost for trade surveillance, supervision, new contract analysis and other appropriate activities.

Mr. President, if the United States is going to retain its preeminant position in the world's commodity futures markets, those markets must have integrity. The reforms contained in this legislation will allow the United States to continue to compete abroad. If confidence in the commodity markets is not restored, this business could go elsewhere.

Mr. President, I want to commend Senator LEAHY for his attention and leadership on this issue. This bill is indeed reform legislation, and as such is not likely to be embraced by the futures industry. I believe the bill, however, represents a necessary step in restoring public confidence in these markets. I urge my colleagues to support the provisions set forth by Senator LEAHY and me on this very important issue.

By Mr. BREAUX (for himself, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. BURDICK, and Mr. BENTSEN):

S. 1731. A bill to provide for the creation, restoration, protection, enhancement, and conservation of coastal wetlands, and to conserve North America wetland ecosystems and waterfowl and the other migratory birds and fish and wildlife that depend upon such habitats, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

CONSERVATION AND RESTORATION OF COASTAL WETLANDS

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, today I am pleased to be joined by Senators JOHNSTON, MITCHELL, BURDICK, and BENTSEN in introducing comprehensive legislation to address the rapid rate of loss of our Nation's wetlands by establishing a program to restore our coastal wetlands and to conserve our important North American wetlands ecosystems.

This bill modifies and combines several legislative proposals now pending in the Senate. Title I of the bill, entitled the Coastal Wetlands Planning, Protection and Restoration Act, addresses the loss of coastal wetlands. This title combines significant features of S. 630, which I had previously introduced, and Senate amendment 2229 offered by Senator JOHNSTON. Both of these provisions have been the subject of hearings during this session.

Subtitles A and B address the unprecedented wetlands loss currently ongoing in the Mississippi River Delta. Forty percent of the coastal wetlands are located in the State of Louisiana, yet, that area is experiencing 80 percent of the Nation's total loss of coastal wetlands. This rate of loss is an estimated 40 to 60 square miles per year. These wetlands are a critical national resource valuable for fish and wildlife habitat, pollution and flood control, and hurricane protection. These vitally important wetland areas require further protection and restoration.

Subtitle C of title I provides grant assistance to coastal States for carrying out coastal wetlands conservation projects. Such projects are intended to address losses in all coastal States through wetlands acquisition, restoration and long term preservation.

Title II of the bill entitled the North American Wetlands Conservation Act, contains a modified version of S. 804, sponsored by Senator MITCHELL, and previously reported by the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works. This title is a crucial program directed toward preserving vital wetland habitat as a means to maintain healthy populations of migratory birds in North America. Populations of such birds have declined due, in a large part, to declines in habitat.

Finally, title III of the bill clarifies that the Corps of Engineers has the authority to engage in environmental restoration activities. As the need for new projects which the corps has traditionally constructed diminishes, the mission of the corps should be redirected to environmental restoration. This provision would help accomplish that, and simply provides that the corps has the authority to give equal consideration to projects that benefit the environment with projects that benefit navigation and flood control. This was a provision originally included in S. 630.

Wetlands loss is a national concern. This proposal would provide a national response to this concern. Our wetlands are being lost every minute of every day. This bill, Mr. President, will take steps immediately upon enactment to restore and conserve our Nation's wetlands.

Restoring and conserving our wetlands will require that we provide the necessary resources. The Senate Finance Committee has reported legislation establishing a wetlands trust fund which is intended to fund a program substantially identical to the program outlined in this bill. The support of the chairman of the Finance Committee in taking action on this wetlands crisis is most appreciated.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I join Senators BREAUX, JOHNSTON, BURDICK, and BENTSEN today in introducing legislation to restore and conserve coastal and inland wetlands.

This legislation is intended to authorize and direct expenditure of moneys from the new wetlands trust fund approved by the Finance Committee and included in the reconciliation legislation for fiscal year 1990 which the Senate will consider shortly.

The wetlands trust fund would consist of receipts from fees on natural gas and oil produced from the Outer Continental Shelf, and I commend Senator BENTSEN and my colleagues on the Finance Committee for establishing this new source of revenues to meet one of the Nation's most pressing environmental needs.

The wetlands of this continent, like the forests of Central America and tropical South America, are libraries of nature which contain volumes of priceless genetic information. They are North America's most biologically productive areas, and roughly a third of the continent's endangered species of animals are dependent on them.

And like the tropical forests, we have subjected our wetlands to much destruction.

From the 1950's to the 1970's, Americans drained, filled, and cleared 9 million acres of wetlands in the 48 contiguous States. Less than half of the original 200 million acres remain, and the destruction continues today at a rate of half a million acres per year—an area 12 times the size of the District of Columbia.

Since the turn of the century, Louisiana has lost more than a million acres of coastal wetlands, and if the present loss rate remains unchanged, Louisiana will lose 2.4 million acres over the next 50 years.

Total wetlands loss in Canadian prairie provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba is estimated to be 40 percent of the original wetlands acreage.

The State of Maine has lost approximately 100,000 acres of wetlands since European settlement began.

The coastal wetlands in Lousiana account for 40 percent of the Nation's coastal wetlands, and they support over 30 percent of the Nation's fish and shellfish harvest and provide wintering habitat for two-thirds of the 6 million ducks and geese in the Mississippi Flyway.

The tremendous loss of the Nation's wetlands in Louisiana is due largely to the dramatic reduction in the amount of sediment carried by the Mississippi River into the coastal zone.

The Army Corps of Engineers, at the direction of Congress and with the support of the State of Louisiana, has managed the Mississippi River primarily for navigation and flood control.

Unfortunately, the river control structures that were built for these purposes also have transported wetland-building sediments to the edge of the Outer Continental Shelf where they are dumped into deep waters of the gulf. Starved of these sediments, soft wetland soils subside, erode, and are lost.

The legislation being introduced today would direct expenditures from the wetlands trust fund for coastal wetlands restoration projects. These projects would create, restore, and protect coastal wetlands by means of diverting sediment and fresh water from the Mississippi River to nearshore areas where wetlands have eroded and disappeared. They would not have substantial navigation or flood control benefits, and they would not include construction of seawalls, levees, or impoundments.

This measure will start us on the road to restoring our wetlands in coastal Louisiana and eliminating future loss of these magnificent areas and the valuable resources they support.

The legislation also would direct expenditures from the wetlands trust fund to restore and conserve other coastal wetlands in the United States.

Finally, the legislation incorporates the provisions of the North American Wetlands Conservation Act, which I introduced earlier this year and which has been approved by the Environment and Public Works Committee, and directs expenditure from the wetlands trust fund to carry out wetlands conservation projects in the United States approved under that act.

One of the principal goals of the North American Wetlands Conservation Act included in this legislation is to begin a long-term commitment to work with Canada and Mexico in implementation of the North American waterfowl management plan.

The plan is the best, and maybe the last opportunity we will ever have to halt the decline of many species of ducks, geese, and other migratory birds.

But the plan is only a statement of needs and objectives.

The North American Wetlands Conservation Act will establish a structure to meet these needs and objectives. And it will provide the Federal matching funds essential to encouraging public and private partnership, for wetlands conservation projects in Canada and Mexico, as well as in the United States.

The destruction of wetlands throughout North America, where many migratory bird species breed, spells disaster for these species just as surely as the destruction of forests in Central and tropical South America, where they winter.

The average number of North American ducks in recent years has been lower than any comparable period on record.

Of the 30 species of migratory nongame birds that are currently of management concern to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service because of their uncertain status, nearly one half are dependent upon coastal and freshwater wetlands.

Thirteen of some of our most abundant and widespread songbirds, like the American goldfinch and the eastern meadowlark, have declined at an average rate of nearly 3 percent per year over the past 20 years.

Introduction of this legislation in conjunction with establishment of the wetlands trust fund will enable us to restore and maintain wetlands throughout the nation and the continent to protect the fisheries, shellfisheries, migratory birds, and the many other public benefits that these valuable aquatic areas provide.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join today with my colleagues, Senators BREAUX, MITCHELL, BURDICK, and BENTSEN, in sponsoring legislation to provide for the restoration and creation of coastal wetlands and to conserve North American wetland habitat. My friend Senator BREAUX has been dedicated to resolving this issue and has played a leadership role in this regard. Likewise, my friend Senator MITCHELL has long exhibited a strong interest and concern for a variety of wetlands issues, especially regarding the North American waterfowl plan and related matters.

I have worked closely with Senator BREAUX and the leadership of the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works in developing this legislation. I am pleased that we have been able to combine the BREAUX, MITCHELL, and JOHNSTON approaches to resolving this problem.

In recent years, numerous studies and reports have documented the serious and deteriorating condition of our coastal marshes and wetlands. Nowhere is this situation more critical than the Gulf Coast and no portion of this region is more seriously impacted than the coastal wetlands of Louisiana. While the State contains over 40 percent of the Nation's coastal wetlands, it experiences over 80 percent of the annual wetland loss. Today, this loss ranges between 40 to 60 square miles annually. Estimates are that unless significant steps are taken, Louisiana will lose an additional 2.4 million acres of coastal wetlands between now and the year 2040.

These losses threaten an almost $1 billion a year commercial fish and shellfish industry; 40 percent of the Nation's annual harvest of wild fur and hides; valuable habitat for nearly 5 million migratory birds; areas of significant recreation use and potential—especially for sport hunting and fishing; and billions of dollars of infrastructure investments.

Mr. President, it will take a significant commitment of resources to address this serious problem. My friends on the Finance Committee, and most particularly, my good friend Senator BENTSEN, the distinguished chairman of that committee, are to be commended for establishing the wetlands trust fund, which will provide the level of substantial funding needed for coastal wetlands restoration and conservation.

Mr. President, it is my expectation that the moneys in the wetlands trust fund will be expended in accordance with the provisions of the legislation we introduce today. This legislation provides funding for priority coastal wetlands both nationwide and in Louisiana, where by far the greatest loss is occurring. It also authorizes the State of Louisiana to develop a wetlands conservation plan, having as its goal no net loss of wetlands in the coastal areas of Louisiana as a result of development activities. Finally, the bill provides for the conservation of North American wetland habitat.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation. I believe this is good legislation that will go far in addressing this critical situation. I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1731

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled,

TITLE I—COASTAL WETLANDS CONSERVATION AND RESTORATION

SECTION 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Coastal Wetlands Planning, Protection and Restoration Act."

SEC. 102. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) wetlands provide multiple benefits and are vital to the Nation's environmental and economic health;

(2) the environmental benefits of wetlands include, among others, providing critical habitat to avian, terrestrial, and aquatic species; maintaining water quality; forming barriers to waves and erosion; helping to reduce flood damage; nurturing valuable commercial and recreational fisheries; and providing habitat for rare and endangered species;

(3) scientists estimate that since European settlement began in the United States, more than 50 per centum of the wetlands in the 48 coterminous States have been lost due to manmade and natural causes;

(4) the State of Louisiana contains a significant portion of the Nation's wetlands including 40 per centum of the Nation's coastal wetlands;

(5) the coastal wetlands of Louisiana are of particular value to the Nation for they contribute 46 per centum of the Nation's annual shrimp harvest; contain the wintering grounds of millions of migratory birds and are crucial to meeting the United States' international migratory bird treaty obligations with Canada, Mexico, Japan, and the Soviet Union; contribute 40 per centum of the Nation's wild fur and hide harvest; contribute 16 percentum of the Nation's total production of petroleum and 20 per centum of the Nation's total production of natural gas; and buffer the destructive effects of hurricanes, storms, and floods;

(6) Louisiana is losing up to 50 square miles of these valuable coastal wetlands per year which is 80 per centum of the total loss of the Nation's coastal wetlands; at this rate of loss, between now and the year 2040, it is estimated that nearly one million additional acres of coastal wetlands will be lost—an area 1⅓ times larger than the State of Rhode Island—bringing the total loss of such wetlands to an estimated 2.4 million acres by the year 2040;

(7) the loss of coastal wetlands in Louisiana means a loss of valuable fish, shellfish, migratory bird, and fur resources that will jeopardize valuable public investments including 100 miles of Federal and State highways, 55 miles of hurricane protection levees and floodwalls, 27 miles of railroad tracks, 1,570 miles of oil and gas pipelines, and 383 miles of gas, water, electric power, and telephone lines;

(8) an estimated 75 per centum of coastal wetlands in Louisiana are privately owned, and the loss of such wetlands adversely affects landowners;

(9) the Mississippi River drains 40 per centum of the United States and has been developed by the Federal Government to provide navigation and flood control benefits to the entire Nation, including construction and maintenance of three of the largest deepwater ports in the country that service producers nationwide; development of an extensive inland navigation system that helps connect producers with the ports and world markets; and the construction of flood control levees that have prevented an estimated $111.3 billion of flood damages;

(10) these flood control and navigation activities conducted by the Federal Government have contributed significantly to the loss of coastal Louisiana wetlands because development of the Mississippi River has resulted in fresh water and sediment no longer nurturing coastal wetlands of the Mississippi River delta, but are being dumped instead into the deep waters of the Gulf of Mexico;

(11) navigation, access, and pipeline canals and other activities related to the exploration, development and production of oil and gas along the Gulf Coast and on the Outer Continental Shelf, have had adverse effects on many of the coastal wetlands of the Gulf Coast region;

(12) in order for the citizens of the United States to continue to reap the environmental benefits from the coastal wetlands of Louisiana, efforts must be made to significantly reduce the rapid rate of loss;

(13) a coastal wetlands restoration plan that includes engineering solutions to restore and conserve coastal wetlands is critical to arrest the loss of wetlands;

(14) in addition to the need for a plan to restore wetlands, a program to conserve coastal wetlands in the State of Louisiana to achieve a goal of no net loss of wetlands as a result of development activities would be beneficial; and

(15) because of the large portion of the Nation's coastal wetlands located within the State of Louisiana, the disproportionate rate of loss of these wetlands, and the unique causes of the loss, there needs to be a unique solution to address the rapid rate of loss of coastal wetlands in the State.

SEC. 103. STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

The purposes of this title are to—

(a) provide for the planning, identification and implementation of priority coastal wetlands restoration projects in Louisiana;

(b) encourage the State of Louisiana to develop a plan with the goal of achieving no net loss of coastal wetlands as a result of future development activities; and

(c) provide for grants to coastal States to implement coastal wetlands conservation projects.

SEC. 104. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this title, the term—

(1) "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Army;

(2) "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

(3) "development activities" means any activity, including the discharge of dredged or fill material, which results directly in a more than de minimus change in the hydrologic regime, bottom contour, or the type, distribution or diversity of hydrophytic vegetation, or which impairs the flow, reach, or circulation of surface water within wetlands or other waters;

(4) "State" means the State of Losusiana;

(5) "coastal State" means a State of the United States in, or bordering on, the Atlantic, Pacific, or Arctic Ocean, the Gulf of Mexico, Long Island Sound, or one or more of the Great Lakes. (B) the restoration, management, or enhancement of coastal wetlands ecosystems if such restoration, management, or enhancement is conducted on coastal lands and waters that are administered for the long-term conservation of such lands and waters and the fish and wildlife dependent thereon; and (8) "Governor" means the governor of Louisiana.

Subtitle A—Priority Projects for Louisiana Coastal Wetlands.

SEC. 105. PRIORITY PROJECTS.

(a) PROJECT LIST. (1) Within 45 days after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary, in conjunction and consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Administrator, and the Governor, shall initiate a process to identify and prepare a list coastal wetlands restoration projects in Louisiana in order of priority, based on the cost-effectiveness of such projects in creating, restoring, protecting, or enhancing coastal wetlands, taking into account the quality of such coastal wetlands, with due allowance for small-scale projects necessary to demonstrate the use of new techniques or materials for coastal wetlands restoration.

(2) Until completion of the plan required by section 108 of this title, such list shall include only those coastal wetlands restoration projects which can be substantially completed during the five-year period commencing on the date the project is placed on the list.

(3) Starting with the year after completion of the plan required by section 108, the coastal wetlands restoration projects placed on the list shall be those identified in such plan.

(4) To assist in the preparation of the list provided for by subsection (a) of this section and the plan required by section 108, the Secretary of the Treasury shall make funds available from the Wetlands Trust Fund (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "Wetlands Fund") to the Secretary to prepare preliminary assessments; general or site specific inventories; reconnaissance, engineering, or other studies; preliminary design work; and such other studies as may be necessary to identify and evaluate the feasibility of such coastal wetlands restoration projects. Such of these funds as are determined to be necessary by the Secretary, but not to exceed the aggregate amount of $5 million annually, shall be allocated by the Secretary to the federal agency heads identified in paragraph (1) of this subsection and the Governor based on the need for such funds and such other factors as the Secretary in consultation with the other federal agency heads and the Governor, deems appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.

(b) TRANSMITTAL OF LIST.—No later than one year after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary shall compile and transmit the initial list of high priority coastal wetlands restoration projects to the Congress. Thereafter, the list shall be updated and transmitted to the Congress annually as part of the President's budget submission. Such transmittal shall include a status report on each project and a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury indicating the amounts available for expenditure from the Wetlands Fund.

(c) LIST CONTENTS.—The list shall include, but not be limited to, the following:

(i) identification, by map or other means, of the coastal area to be covered by the coastal wetlands restoration project; and

(ii) a detailed description of each proposed coastal wetlands restoration project including a justification for including such project on the list, the proposed activities to be carried out pursuant to each coastal wetlands restoration project, the benefits to be realized by such project, the identification of a lead federal agency to undertake each proposed coastal wetlands restoration project, an estimated timetable for the completion of each coastal wetlands restoration project, and the estimated cost of each such project.

(d) BENEFITS.—Where such a determination is required under applicable law, the net ecological, aesthetic, and cultural bene-fitgs, together with the economic benefits, shall be deemed to exceed the costs of any coastal wetlands restoration project within the State which the Secretary finds to contribute significantly to wetlands restoration.

SEC. 106. FUNDING FOR PRIORITY COASTAL WETLANDS RESTORATION PROJECTS.

(a) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—Except with respect to mcneys made available from the Wetlands Fund pursuant to paragraphs 105(a)(4) and 109(c)(1) of this title, all moneys in the Wetlands Fund available for coastal wetlands restoration projects under this subtitle shall be allocated in accordance with the priorities set forth on the list prepared in accordance with subsection 105(a) of this subtitle.

(b) FUNDING FOR PROJECTS.—The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, one the date one year after the initial list prepared in accordance with subsection 105(a) of this subtitle is transmitted pursuant to subsection 105(b), and one the first day of February of each succeeding year, to make moneys from the Wetlands Fund directly available to the head of the appropriate Federal agency for the purpose of carrying out coastal wetlands restoration projects as identified on such list. Seventy-five percent of the total amount deposited in the Wetlands Funds during a given fiscal year shall be available for carrying out the provisions of subtitles A and B of this title, and shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 107. COST-SHARING.

(a) FEDERAL SHARE.—The amount made available from the Wetlands Fund for any coastal wetlands restoration project under this subtitle shall be 80 percent of the cost of such project.

In the event that the Secretary and the Administrator jointly determine that the State is not taking reasonable steps to implement and administer such plan, the amount made available from the Wetlands Fund for any coastal wetlands restoration project shall revert to 80 percent of the cost of the project: Provided, however, That this shall not occur until the State has been provided notice, 90 days to take corrective action, and a hearing on the matter.

(c) FORM OF STATE SHARE.—The share of the cost required of the State shall be from a non-Federal source. Such State share shall consist of a cash contribution of not less than 5 percent of the cost of the project. The balance of such State share may take the form of land, easements, or rights-way, or any other form of in-kind contribution.

(d) PLAN MODIFICATION.—The Secretary, in conjunctions and consultation with those parties listed in subsection (a) of this section, may modify the plan from time to time as necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

(e) PLAN SUBMISSION.—Upon completion of the plan, the Secretary shall submit the plan to the Congress and to the Governor.

(f) PLAN EVALUATION.—Not less than every three years after the completion of the plan provided for by this section, the Secretary shall provide a report to the Congress containing a scientific evaluation of the effectiveness of the coastal wetlands restoration projects carried out under the plan in creating, restoring, protecting and enhancing coastal wetlands.

Subtitle B. Louisiana Coastal Wetlands Conservation Planning.

SEC. 109. AGREEMENT TO DEVELOP A WETLANDS CONSERVATION PLAN.

(A) AGREEMENT. The Secretary and the Administrator are directed to enter into an agreement authorized by subsection (b), with the Governor upon notification of the Governor's willingness to enter into such agreement.

(b) AGREEMENT. (1) Upon receiving notification pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary and the Administrator shall promptly enter into an agreement with the State described in paragraph (2) (hereafter in this title referred to as the "agreement").

(2) The agreement shall—

(A) set forth a process by which the State agrees to develop, in accordance with this title, a Coastal Wetlands Conservation Plan (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Plan");

(B) designate a single agency of the State to develop the Plan;

(C) assure an opportunity for participation in the development of the Plan, during the planning period, by the public and by federal and State agencies;

Subtitle C.—Coastal Wetlands Conservation Grants

SEC. 115. GRANTS.

(a) GRANTS FOR COASTAL WETLANDS CONSERVATION PROJECTS.—For each fiscal year, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make available to the Secretary of the Interior an amount equal to 10 per centum of the total amount deposited in the Wetlands Fund during such fiscal year for use by the Secretary of the Interior in making matching grants to any coastal state to carry out coastal wetlands conservation projects.

(b) PRIORITY.—Subject to the cost-sharing requirements of this subtitle, the Secretary of the Interior may grant or otherwise provide matching moneys from the Wetlands Fund to any coastal state which submits a proposal substantial in character and design to carry out a coastal wetlands conservation project. In awarding such matching grants, the Secretary of the Interior shall give priority to coastal wetlands conservation projects that are—

(1) in areas affected by or likely to be affected by offshore oil or gas exploration, development, or production activities;

(2) in coastal states that have established dedicated funding for programs to acquire coastal wetlands, natural areas and open spaces; and

(3) consistent with the National Wetlands Priority Conservation Plan developed under section 301 of the Emergency Wetlands Resources Act (16 U.S.C. 3921).

(c) CONDITIONS.—The Secretary of the Interior may only grant or otherwise provide matching moneys from the Wetlands Fund to a coastal state for purposes of carrying out a coastal wetlands conservation project if the grant or provision is subject to terms and conditions that will ensure that any real property interest acquired in whole or in part, or enhanced, managed, or restored with such moneys will be administered for the long-term conservation of such lands and waters and the fish and wildlife dependent thereon. Real property and interests in real property acquired pursuant to this subtitle shall not become part of the National Wildlife Refuge System.

SEC. 116. COST-SHARING.

(a) FEDERAL SHARE.—Grants to coastal states of matching moneys from the Wetlands Fund by the Secretary of the Interior for any fiscal year to carry out coastal wetlands conservation projects shall be used for the payment of not to exceed 50 percent of the total costs of such projects: Provided, however, That such matching moneys may be used for payment of not to exceed 75 per centum of the costs of such projects if a coastal state has established a trust fund, from which the principal is not spent, for the purpose of acquiring coastal wetlands, other natural areas or open spaces.

(b) FROM THE STATE SHARE.—The matching moneys required of a coastal state to carry out a coastal wetlands conservation project shall not be derived from a Federal source.

(c) PARTIAL PAYMENTS.—(1) The Secretary of the Interior may from time to time make matching payments to carry our coastal wetlands conservation projects as such projects progress, but such payments including previous payments, if any, shall not be more than the Federal pro rata share of any such project in conformity with subsection (a) of the section.

(2) The Secretary of the Interior may enter into agreements to make matching payments on an initial portion of a coastal wetlands conservation project and to agree to make payments on the remaining Federal share of the cost of such project from subsequent moneys in the Wetlands Fund if and when they become available. The liability of the United States under such an agreement is contingent upon the continued availability of funds for the purpose of this subtitle.

SEC. 117. WETLANDS ASSESSMENT.

Notwithstanding the foregoing sections of this subtitle, $2,500,000 shall be made available by the Secretary of the Interior in fiscal year 1991 to the State of Texas for an assessment of the status, condition and trends of wetlands in that state.

TITLE II—NORTH AMERICAN WETLANDS CONSERVATION

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "North American Wetlands Conservation Act."

SEC. 202. FINDINGS AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the maintenance of healthy populations of migratory birds in North America is dependent on the protection, restoration, and management of wetland ecosystems and other habitats in Canada, as well as in the United States and Mexico;

(2) wetland ecosystems provide essential and significant habitat for fish, shellfish, and other wildlife of commercial, recreational, scientific, and aesthetic values;

(3) almost 35 per centum of all rare, threatened, and endangered species of animals are dependent on wetland ecosystems;

(4) wetland ecosystems provide substantial flood and storm control values and can obviate the need for expensive manmade control measures;

(5) wetland ecosystems make a significant contribution to water availability and quality, recharging groundwater, filtering surface runoff, and providing waste treatment;

(6) wetland ecosystems provide aquatic areas important for recreational and aesthetic purposes;

(7) more than 50 per centum of the original wetlands in the United States alone have been lost;

(8) wetlands destruction, loss of nesting cover, and degradation of migration and wintering habitat have contributed to long-term downward trends in populations of migratory bird species such as pintails, American bitterns, and black ducks;

(9) the migratory bird treaty obligations of the United States with Canada, Mexico, and other countries require protection of wetlands that are used by migratory birds for breeding, wintering, or migration and are needed to achieve and to maintain optimum population levels; distributions, and patterns of migration;

(10) the 1988 amendments to the Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act of 1980 require the Secretary of the Interior to identify conservation measures to assure that nongame migratory bird species do not reach the point at which measures of the Endangered Species Act are necessary;

(11) protection of migratory birds and their habitats requires long-term planning and the close cooperation and coordination of management activities by Canada, Mexico, and the United States within the framework of the 1916 and 1936 Migratory Bird Conventions and the Convention on Nature Protection and Wildlife Preservation in the Western Hemisphere;

(12) the North American Waterfowl Management Plan, signed in 1986 by the Minister of Environment for Canada and the Secretary of the Interior for the United States, provides a framework for maintaining and restoring an adequate habitat base to ensure perpetuation of populations of North American waterfowl and other migratory bird species;

(13) a tripartite agreement signed in March 1988 by the Director General for Ecological Conservation of Natural Resources of Mexico, the Director of the Canadian Wildlife Service and the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service provides for expanded cooperative efforts in Mexico to conserve wetlands for migratory birds;

(14) the long-term conservation of migratory birds and habitat for these species will require the coordinated action of governments, private organizations, landowners, and other citizens; and

(15) the treaty obligations of the United States under the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance especially as Waterfowl Habitat requires promotion of conservation and wise use of wetlands.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purposes of this title are to encourage partnership among public agencies and private interests—

(1) to protect, enhance, restore, and manage an appropriate distribution and diversity of wetland ecosystems and other habitats for migratory birds and other fish and wildlife in North America;

(2) to maintain current or improved distributions of migratory bird populations; and

(3) to sustain an abundance of waterfowl and other migratory birds consistent with the goals of the North American Waterfowl Management Plan and the international obligations contained in the migratory bird treaties and conventions and other agreements with Canada, Mexico, and other countries.

By Mr. BENTSEN:

S. 1733. A bill to suspend temporarily the duty on a certain specialty thermoset resin; to the Committee on Finance.

TEMPORARY DUTY SUSPENSION ON A SPECIALTY THERMOSET RESIN

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, today I introduce a bill to suspend temporarily the duty on a specialty thermoset plastic resin called XU-71787. This bill would suspend through 1992 the current 5.8 percent rate of duty on the importation of XU-71787.

XU-71787 is a highly specialized thermoset resin imported into the United States from Switzerland. It is an experimental resin used in high-speed computer applications and in producing advanced plastic composites for aerospace, sports equipment, industrial, and automotive applications. Experiments are being conducted with this resin for some military applications such as the advanced tactical fighter and advanced tactical aircraft programs.

The manufacture of XU-71787 involves a multistage chemical process. The first stage is performed in the United States, but the remaining stages are carried out in Switzerland because there is no United States chemical manufacturer with the raw materials and processing equipment needed to complete production. The capital investment required to perform the additional stages of processing in the United States would make such production unprofitable at this point, while the product is still in the early stages of market development and product volumes are small. According to an International Trade Commission analysis, there was no domestic production of XU-71787, or any viable substitute, in the years 1984 through 1988.

Duty-free importation of this resin will allow domestic users of the resin to obtain it at a lower cost until domestic production becomes feasible.

Because XU-71787 competes with less than 5 percent of the total plastic resins market in the United States and there is no domestic manufacturer of the resin, temporary duty suspension should be noncontroversial. In addition, temporary duty suspension should cost only approximately $95,000 over the 3-year period it is in effect.

In sum, Mr. President, I believe that this legislation is desirable and noncontroversial, and I urge my colleagues to support it. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1733

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

SECTION 1. Subchapter II of chapter 99 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new subheading:

"9902.30.07	XU-71787 (hydrocarbon novolac cynate ester) (provided for in subheading) 3911.90.30) ...	Free	No charge	No charge	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this act applies with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the 15th day after the date of the enactment of this act.●

By Mr. BREAUX:

S. 1734. A bill to regulate interstate commerce with respect to parimutuel wagering on greyhound racing, to maintain the stability of the greyhound racing industry, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

INTERSTATE GREYHOUND RACING ACT

● Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, the bill that I am introducing today, the Interstate Greyhound Racing Act of 1989, will regulate commerce with respect to interstate parimutuel wagering on greyhound racing.

Eleven years ago a similar bill, the Interstate Horse Racing Act of 1978, was considered by the Congress and passed both the Senate and the House by voice vote. This legislation would provide a statutory structure for greyhound racing comparable to that currently provided for horse racing.

Mr. President, this bill does not require that we spend Federal money. It does not create a new agency of government, and it does not legalize off-track betting. The decisions as to whether racing or wagering are to be permitted are left to the States.

This legislation provides that an interstate wager on a greyhound race taking place in one State may not be placed with an off-track betting office in another State without the consent of:

First, the racetrack at which the race is to be run;

Second, the racing commission of the State where the race is to be run; and Third, the racing commission of the State where the off-track betting choice is located.

Greyhound wagering across State lines will not take place without the agreement of these indispensable parties. State interests in the regulation of racing are protected, as are the interests of greyhound and racetrack owners. A host racetrack must have a written agreement with the greyhound owners' group, specifying the terms and conditions under which the track will consent to an interstate wager with an off-track, out-of-State system. Thus, the proprietary interests of greyhound owners would be protected in the same manner as those of horse owners.

Mr. President, this bill allows the regulation of wagers placed in one State on the outcome of a race taking place in another State. This system would require the concurrence of all the parties involved, including the State racing commissions, the racetracks, the greyhound owners, and the off-track establishments. This system is, Mr. President, one that would prevent abuses and ensure that the interests of all the parties and institutions are properly protected. I urge my colleagues to join me in advancing this worthwhile legislation.●

Such an agreement should include provisions for reciprocal overflight and hot pursuit authority as well as arrangements for the joint crewing of U.S. and Mexican drug enforcement aircraft.

(2) the President should report on the status of negotiations concerning this agreement in the annual International Narcotics Control Strategy Report on Mexico.

(3) if the President certifies in this report that the United States and Mexico have made significant progress toward the conclusion of the government, to include provisions for reciprocal overflight and hot pursuit authority as well as arrangements for the joint crewing of U.S. and Mexican drug enforcement aircraft, described in subsection (1), the Senate would consider such a declaration as a credible sign of the Government of Mexico's desire to "cooperate fully" with the United States on illegal drug interdiction programs pursuant to Sec. 2013 of P.L. 99-570.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

GILA WILDERNESS CELEBRATION

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues the 25th anniversary of the Wilderness Act. I had the privilege of attending a celebration of this landmark legislation this past weekend. I want to commend the U.S. Forest Service, the Friends of the Gila Forest, and Western New Mexico University for the well organized series of events commemorating the silver anniversary of the Wilderness Act. I would like to express my utmost appreciation to the sponsors of the celebration, especially the dedicated employees of the southwestern region of the U.S. Forest Service who made this such a successful event.

The ceremony was timely as this is the silver anniversary of the Wilderness Act and what more appropriate place to recognize the creation of the National Wilderness Preservation System than on the national forest which is the site of the first wilderness in the United States. The Gila Wilderness is especially significant in the history of the wilderness movement. In 1924, Aldo Leopold, a great New Mexican conservationist, a U.S. Forest Service employee, and a cofounder of the Wilderness Society, urged the Forest Service to protect the Gila National Forest. That same year, the Gila became the Nation's first administratively designated wilderness.

The Forest Service is to be commended for its foresight in recognizing the wilderness concept and for its continued professional role in wilderness management. Dave Jolly is to be congratulated for his effective management in the southwestern region.

While the Gila and other areas were protected administratively before 1964, the Wilderness Act was necessary to ensure their protection forever. We are especially indebted to the late Senator Clinton P. Anderson for making the Wilderness Act a reality. Senator Anderson of New Mexico was a leader of the conservation Congress, which earned its name by passing a sparkling collection of conservation measures in 1963 and 1964. The jewel in that particular crown was the Wilderness Act which was signed on September 3, 1964.

Today, thanks to Senator Anderson and his colleagues, there are 474 units in the National Wilderness Preservation System, encompassing about 91 million acres. Our Nation's Wilderness Preservation System is envied throughout the world.

On Saturday, September 30, the Forest Service unveiled a bronze plaque commemorating the contributions of Senator Anderson to the establishment of the National Wilderness Preservation System. We all owe a debt to Senator Anderson for helping protect these special pristine wilderness lands that provide valuable solitude, critical watershed, wildlife habitat and a legacy of our natural heritage.

Wilderness enthusiasts and managers, particularly the Forest Service, have made incredible progress in the last 25 years since the passage of the Wilderness Act. Some people have criticized the Federal Government for adding more wilderness and for managing wilderness in strict accordance with the Wilderness Act. But I believe no apologies are necessary for accomplishing the intent of the Wilderness Act. The framers of the Wilderness Act has a strong and purposeful vision that should serve as guidance for our actions today and in the future.

In closing, I would again like to acknowledge the Gila National Forest, the southwestern region of the USDA Forest Service, Western New Mexico University, and the Friends of the Gila Forest for sponsoring the Gila Wilderness celebration. It is entities such as these that brought the Wilderness Act to fruition and that continue action in wilderness designation, management, and education. We are deeply indebted to their fine efforts.●

WESTVACO COMPANY EXPANSION

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I traveled earlier this week, together with my colleague Senator ROBB, to Covington, VA, to participate in ceremonies marking a $400 million expansion of the Westvaco Co.'s paper mill operations there.

The Westvaco Co. is a major employer in the Commonwealth of Virginia, and it uses state-of-the-art technology to produce its products, approximately 9 percent of which it exports overseas.

During the ceremonies, Westvaco's president and chief executive officer, Mr. John A. Luke, delivered some thought-provoking remarks on two areas of importance to his enterprise—one dealing with the challenge to American firms of trading in today's international markets, and the other with his company's experience in complying with Federal and State environmental laws.

Mr. President, I found Mr. Luke's comments to be of considerable significance. I ask permission to enter a copy of his address into the RECORD, so it might be shared with my colleagues and others.

The remarks follow:

REMARKS OF JOHN A. LUKE: COVINGTON EXPANSION ANNOUNCEMENT, OCTOBER 2, 1989

This is a very important day for Westvaco and its Covington mill. I believe that it is an equally major day for this area and the Commonwealth of Virginia. And I know that today's news will be welcomed, as well, by our customers here in America and throughout the world.

All of us in Westvaco are very pleased to have such a distinguished assembly of guests here to share in our announcement. We are deeply honored by your presence.

There are two matters I want to address prior to sharing with you our announcement, and both are environmental. One relates to the business environment and the other relates to the natural environment.

The first dealing with the business environment is that we live and work in an increasingly competitive world. We respect and we welcome competition—it is the force that drives progress, and we fully accept our responsibility to meet the demands it places on us. We always have done everything in our power to be fully competitive, and we will continue to do so in the interest of our shareholders, our customers, our employees, and the communities where we are located.

The world is now one market, and its needs are served by suppliers from all parts of it. Our competitors are no longer only those here in America. They are located in every region of the globe, and they are able, aggressive, and determined. Their plants are increasingly modern and efficient, and their products are very, very good.

Beyond this, the markets of the world are not nearly as open and free as those in this country, and this is the international business environment that we face. Others have in place a variety of barriers designed to protect their own industry, and most are also directly subsidized by their governments—sources of competitive advantage that we in America do not share. These countries also have many forms of very forgiving regulatory support which are carefully designed to enhance the competitive position of their industry. The world is a long way from being a level playing field with the game played under the same rules for all teams.

While we must compete in the world with products made in other countries, we have equally demanding and intense competition right here at home in America. There are no protective market barriers, but there are variations among the domestic business environments. These measure the extent to which a state and local community assures that its industry has the same positive support as do others against which it competes. A business environment describes just how strongly a community feels about the competitive position of its industry. Business environment is a broad combination of factors, but two which are most readily visible are taxation and regulation, and in these, comparisons can readily be made. It is easy to see whether an industry is penalized with high taxes or more costly regulation than are its competitors elsewhere.

Higher than competitive taxation and more costly regulation clearly and directly affect an industry's ability to compete. As such, we take them very seriously. We cannot disregard anything that weakens our ability to compete. Westvaco stands ready now and always to work closely with its state and local communities to be sure that competitive equity is our joint product, and that each business environment is just as state-of-the-art as the organization and facilities it supports.

The competitive situation constantly tests our ability to its utmost limits, and it means that there is practically no margin between success and failure. As such, I cannot emphasize strongly enough the importance that we attach to the need for us all—this community, this state, all of our salaried and hourly employees, our suppliers—to work closely and positively together in our independent, but very interrelated roles. Team work is essential to the future strength of this mill and its potential for steady employment and economic contribution to this area. I expressed these same views last January when I spoke at the Chamber of Commerce meeting in Hot Springs. They were true then, and they are even more true today.

Following that speech, we were very heartened by the commitment of support that we received. And, believe me, that response has played a very significant role in the decision I will announce today. We welcome your support, and we honor it in the spirit offered. Together we are going to do great things.

The second matter I want to address deals with the natural environment and particularly one aspect of it. It is this, quite honestly, that has delayed our decision-making because of the uncertainty surrounding it. Westvaco has had a long-standing commitment to the environment and to the safety of its products, its workplaces, and its communities. As a company, we have invested $300 million in assuring its protection—$130 million of it right here in Covington. Our investments began well before the EPA was born, with many being voluntary and well ahead of regulatory requirement. In terms of regulation, I can assure you that every Westvaco facility is in full compliance with every regulatory standard governing it. We have done more than has been necessary, and we will continue to do so because we believe in it. It is good business, and a healthy environment is important for society. It is that simple.

Against this background, the natural environmental aspect that has delayed our expansion decision is dioxin. When we became aware, as a result of a congressionally mandated study, that dioxin was being found in minute quantities below bleached paper mills, we began a major, voluntary, scientific effort to ascertain the facts in our mills and to correct any problem that might exist. Our investigations determined that dioxin was being produced in trace quantities as an unwanted by-product of the pulp bleaching process, and our technology promptly pointed the way to process changes to reduce the potential for its creation. We were the very first company to announce a voluntary and comprehensive dioxin reduction program, and our remarkable progress since then has put us at the cutting edge of industry progress.

The result of this work is that Covington's products do not contain detectable dioxin at the limits of today's analytical technology and neither does its effluent. This is a dramatic accomplishment—it is a credit to our scientists and to our operating personnel at all levels. It has required an investment of $10 million here in Covington and a total of $30 million across the company, and it has been done on Westvaco's own initiative and ahead of any regulatory requirement.

The EPA is studying the future regulation of dioxin discharges, but it will be at least several years before final standards are promulgated, and there is presently no way to know exactly what they will finally be. However, levels seem to be under consideration that are literally 750 times beyond the ability of today's most advanced science to even measure.

Further, EPA uses a dioxin potency factor 1,600 times more severe than Canada, and some 150 times more severe than the Netherlands, Germany, and other developed, industrial nations. Additionally, EPA's risk assessment assumptions are very different and substantially more severe than other agencies in our own government. There is no rationality of standards whatsoever between the agencies of our own government or between the world's industrial nations. These matters are, potentially, very serious competitive disadvantages to Covington and the U.S. paper industry.

To put the dioxin matter in yet another perspective, the whole of the U.S. paper industry accounts for less than 1 percent of all the dioxin generated in this country. The total quantity of dioxin released in the combined wastewater from all of the 104 bleached paper mills in this country over the period of a whole year amounts to just two ounces. Yes, two ounces from all 104 mills in a whole year! We calculate, but cannot measure, that any wastewater discharge of dioxin from Covington would, at most, amount to less than one hundredth of one ounce over a whole year, and this would be diluted in 175 billion gallons of river flow.

Extensive fish samplings have been conducted independently by Westvaco and the State of Virginia at various locations along the river during the past year. All test results are safely below the criteria used by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to express a level of concern associated with fish.

Finally, it remains an absolute fact that no causative link between dioxin and any serious human health problem has ever been demonstrated.

Since final dioxin standards on a national basis cannot be accurately forecast, and since uncertainty will prevail for a number of years, we ask only that sound science and regulatory reason be the compelling forces in their development. We ask as well that any standard which Virginia may adopt be based on eqaually sound science and regulatory reason. We are counting on this, and we are counting equally on your active and personal participation in the country's political process to assure that this is the regulatory approach. Your sound judgment and your active involvement can well be critical.

Despite regulatory uncertainty, Westvaco can no longer wait to respond to the growing market demand for the bleached board products made here at Covington. I have said many times that we are developing the world's best products and that we intend to meet the market demand they create. Thereafter, I am very pleased to announce that Westvaco's Board of Directors has approved the largest single investment in the company's history. This investment in the amount of $400 million, which will be made in Covington, will be for an additional increment of pulping capacity and for a large, state-of-the-art, new paper machine which will initially produce 600 tons per day, but which will have an eventual capability in the range of 1,000 tons per day. The new facilities will incorporate state-of-the-art environmental protection throughout, and there will not be any adverse environmental impact.

When added to the $130 million already authorized for the new recovery boiler, today's new investment represents a financial commitment of $530 million in a period of six months to the Covington mill and to the markets it serves. It also represents, by far, the largest industrial capital investment ever made in the Commonwealth of Virginia.

This major investment will significantly strengthen Covington's competitive position in its markets, and it will also significantly strengthen the job security of all who work here. The additional pulp will be produced incrementally, but we will create about 50 new jobs to staff the paper machine.

Construction will proceed promptly so that the new machine can be operational in June 1992. The construction contracts will be awarded to qualified contractors on a competitive basis to assure the very best construction performance at the very lowest cost. We expect that over the course of construction, more than 1,200 construction workers will be required.

Expansion at Covington is more than just another step in Westvaco's history. It is a very key part of our future. We are a strong company today because of the members of our organization and also because of the vision and commitment of those who have gone before. We are a strong company because we have always had a firm sense of purpose and direction. Our current performance is based on clearly defined earlier plans, and our future performance will be the result of more of the same—able people, organizational commitment, and clear programs and objectives of the type represented by today's announcement. We feel very positively about the future and the opportunity it holds for Westvaco. We are investing in it aggressively and at record levels.

I have absolute confidence that our Westvaco organization will perform with distinction as it brings this record $530-million investment to operational reality and market success.

I have the same absolute confidence that, as the Westvaco team goes about its job, the unflagging support of the fine people and able leaders in this area and this state will be right there with us. This is the ingredient that is now crucial to competitive success.

In conclusion, I want to add that we particularly value this opportunity to share our plans and aspirations with you, because we deeply believe in clear, forthright, and proactive communication throughout our organization and throughout our communities.

Thank you.●

TRIBUTE TO PARTICIPANTS OF THE NATIONAL HISPANA LEADERSHIP INITIATIVE

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, today I rise to offer a tribute to 25 outstanding women selected to participate in the "National Hispana Leadership Initiative" because of their significant contributions to their communities.

Hispanic women are part of the rich diversity of America, and help lead this Nation in business, education, law, religion, public service and in family life.

The leadership initiative has, as its goal, to help prepare local Hispanic leaders for positions of national impact. They have studied public policy, management, goal setting, action planning and executive leadership, and have attended training sessions on national issues facing the Hispanic community today and tomorrow.

The women selected represent different regions, ethnic subgroups, professions and ages. I would like to recognize these leaders: Yolanda Alvarado, Conchi Bretos, Patricia Carpio, Maria Del Rosario Castro, Margarita Colmenares, Ivette Del Rio, Rosa Elsbree, Alicia Fernandez, Nely Galan, Anita Gomez-Bennett, Carmen Lomellin, Olga "Cookie" Mapula, Rosa Montano, Theresa Nieves, Pauline Nunez, Ella Ochoa, Deborah Ortega, Gloria Parra, Janice Payan, Mercedes Pena, Janice Petrovich, Hermelinda Pompa, Lula Rodriguez, Miriam Singer and Maria Vizcarrondo-DeSoto.

These outstanding citizens already have demonstrated their commitment and leadership abilities—our Nation is ready for them.●

MY GRANDFATHER'S LIFE

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, during each recess period I make it a point to set up listening post meetings to obtain the views and concerns of my constituents. Because I am a strong believer in participatory democracy, I visit all of the 99 counties in my State at least once every year.

Through the course of these meetings, Mr. President, I believe I am given a rare opportunity to not only hear the concerns of my constituents, but also to feel the emotion in their voice, a fact that does not always come through in a written letter or postcard.

Mr. President, I am always struck by the articulation of those I visit and the knowledge each possesses on the issues we are dealing with in the Congress. At one of these listening post meetings in Pocahontas, IA, during the month of August I received a letter from a gentleman in attendance by the name of Herman C. Aaberg. The letter was somewhat different than I normally receive, in that Mr. Aaberg did not write to me about any problem, but rather to share a personal moment between his granddaughter and himself.

Because I was so impressed by the granddaughter's research on her grandfather, I would like to share those words with you and the rest of my colleagues. I ask to insert, at this point in the RECORD, a tribute to Mr. Aaberg by his granddaughter, Noonie Benford, entitled My Grandfather's Life: "The Son of Poor Norwegian Immigrants Contributes to Agriculture, Public Health and Society."

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that our grandchildren, colleagues, and friends will speak as well of us regarding our accomplishments. Hard work, perseverance, and dedication appear to be the key elements of Mr. Aaberg's life. This is an example we can all use to guide our daily lives.

MY GRANDFATHER'S LIFE: "THE SON OF POOR NORWEGIAN IMMIGRANTS CONTRIBUTES TO AGRICULTURE, PUBLIC HEALTH AND SOCIETY"

(By Noonie Benford)

This is the story of my grandfather, Herman C. Aaberg, son of Norwegian pioneers, and his extraordinary service to American agriculture and the nation.

He was born in 1902 on a primitive Nebraska homestead, during a time when farmers, ranchers and many other people were suffering from life-threatening diseases transmitted from livestock, such as tuberculosis and brucellosis.

My grandfather lost his mother to tuberculosis when he was but six years old. She called him to her bedside a few hours before she died, and asked God to take care of her little boy. He credits her prayers with giving him the strength and ability to assume a leading role in the eradication of this disease.

Tuberculosis also claimed the lives of three of his sisters and one brother; and my grandpa himself became infected as a young teenager. He was not expected to live. Banished to a small tent, isolated from his family and friends for several months, he was never able to attend high school.

He determined that if his life would be spared, he would pledge his years on earth to eradicating tuberculosis and other livestock diseases that had such a profound and devastating impact on his whole family.

The cost of vaccinating to control hog cholera alone was $1 million a week. The dollar loss from the death of hogs was many millions more. More than 7,000 people were infected with undulant fever each year, and a high percentage of cattle and hogs were aborting their calves and pigs.

Tuberculosis was the most serious disease of both livestock and humans at that time. Hundreds of costly sanitariums were built for treating human infected with this dreaded disease. The sanitariums were of little value in eradicating the disease, since they did not deal with the source of the problem.

Although my grandpa had missed all of high school, he eventually scraped together enough money from farming in the lower Rio Grande Valley in Texas to complete a two-year noncollegiate course in agriculture at Iowa State University, finishing near the top of his class. He also met the "most perfect human being he has ever known," Iris Leith, who later became my wonderful Grandma. They have been married for 64 years.

Grandpa's first job after college was a supervisor of the Lake Mills-Scarville cow testing association, for which he earned $65.00 a month (minus the cost of his own transportation). A horse and buggy sufficed for the first few months, until he was able to buy an old Ford for $65.00. He says this was valuable job experience; and at the end of 21 months, at age 23, he was employed as the County Extension Director in Winnebago County, succeeding a Dr. Carson, who had initiated a tuberculosis eradication program.

With the help of the Farm Bureau in Winnebago County, Grandpa took the leadership in ridding the world of tuberculosis in poultry, hogs and cattle. Winnebago was the first in Iowa to be rid of this disease.

After work as County Extension Director in Winnebago and Sioux Counties for seven years, Gramp was selected as Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for Iowa, where he served for four years. He took an active role in livestock disease control and eradication, and in the eradication of a most serious outbreak of grasshoppers and chinch bugs, which threatened crops. Only after he distributed more than 300 carloads of poisonous bran and creosote, with the full cooperation of the County Farm Bureaus and Extension Service, were the pests taken care of.

In the early 1930s, Gramp had charge of administering the first Federal Corn Loan Program of 45¢ per bushel. With the help of three assistants, County warehouse boards and corn sealers were set up and trained in a matter of a few weeks. Corn loans were being made at the rate of $1 million a day, totaling more than $50 million, at a cost of one-half cent per bushel. Corn prices more than doubled in one month. Thousands of Iowa farmers were able to save their farms, and every loan was paid in full.

After leaving the Iowa Department of Agriculture, my grandfather was employed as Iowa Representative of the Chicago Producer Livestock Commission Company, which was organized by the Farm Bureau in the early 1920s, and also represented the Livestock Producers Credit Corporation of Chicago.

While engaged in this work, Gramp, with the help of the Iowa and County Farm Bureaus and the Extension Service, organized 70 Cattle Feeders Associations to help livestock producers solve their marketing problems. Study and research committees were set up in these counties. Livestock marketing problems were uncovered, and solutions suggested. A state report of this activity was made to the American Farm Bureau, where a national committee had been established. A well-known agricultural economist, who later became President Kennedy's ambassador to India, was employed. This work was temporarily discontinued due to the outbreak of World War II.

My grandpa was asked to discuss the Iowa report at the American Farm Bureau Convention in Chicago in 1939. This renewed Farm Bureau interest in livestock marketing, and in 1944 he was asked to take charge of this work. Gramp not only headed the Livestock Department, but was later to help set up commodity departments for field crops, poultry, dairy products, and fruits and vegetables. He later became Director of the Commodity Marketing and Research Division. He drafted the National Hog Cholera Bill, and presented it to Congressional committees on behalf of the Farm Bureau, where it passed unanimously.

When asked, my grandfather feels that his significant service to American agriculture was made possible by the Farm Bureau organization structure, the establishment and work of special committees, livestock industry representatives, as well and the State and U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Gramp became very active in the Methodist Church, the Masonic Lodge and Kiwanis Club, which, under his direction as president, landscaped the historic town of Mineral Point, Wisconsin, after a severe ice storm. The Wisconsin-Upper Michigan Kiwanis Club gave him special recognition for this project; and hundreds of trees planted there and in other cities are a living memorial to his work.

Many awards for distinguished service to agriculture were presented to my grandfather by the United States Department of Agriculture, the Iowa, and the Pocahontas County Farm Bureaus.

When he retired from the Farm Bureau in 1968, Gramp was commended by the Board of Directors as follows:

"Whereas: This is the last meeting of the Livestock Advisory Committee at which Herman Aaberg will serve as Staff Secretary;

Whereas: The efforts and abilities of this man have been of utmost benefit to AFBF and its members, as well as the livestock industry and agriculture in general;

Whereas: The activities of this man in the field of agriculture have been both a credit and an asset to AFBF:

BE IT RESOLVED that we, the members of the Livestock Advisory Committe commend Herman Aaberg for outstanding services rendered to AFBF and the agricultural industry."

At his family's request, Gramp has written the story of his life for his descendents. At the request of Carl Hamilton, vice president of Iowa State University, a copy of his life story, plus about 100 pounds of records of his work and publications covering four decades, have been placed in the University Library as a historic record of Iowa, as well as American agriculture for research by graduate students and historians.

My grandfather is the only person who has received the Animal Health Award from the Animal Health Division of the Agricultural Research Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture. It reads, "For advancing animal health programs by creating a harmony of purpose among people in industry and government, and by linking the spirits and energies of people in a common objective."

I would like to digress from my grandpa's distinguished career for just a moment and relate a side of him of which only a handful of his thousands of friends and colleagues throughout the world are aware. In 1962, my parents' marriage broke up and my mother, my sister, age six months, and me age two years, in tow, came to live with her parents. My sister and I have always felt that our grandparents were responsible for raising us, and giving us the love, self esteem and values we will carry with us throughout life.

When my grandpa retired from the American Farm Bureau in 1968, he moved us to Mineral Point, Wisconsin, where he and my Grandma had purchased a farm with a 140-year-old historic stone house. The five of us lived a story book life on this wonderful farm.

On a trip to the Mayo Clinic for routine check-ups, it was discovered that I had to have emergency brain surgery; an operation my grandpa sold several acres of land to pay for. Worse yet, my mother was found to have cancer. She died a few months later.

I feel I could never have made such complete recovery, and gone on to thrive, had my grandparents not been so completely supportive and encouraging. No grandchildren and grandparents have ever been closer. No matter what kind of jams my sister and I got ourselves into over the years, Grandma and Grandpa have always been there to help us out and guide us. And while the effect of this contribution may not be felt as widely as my grandpa's wide-ranging agriculture work, it seems just as remarkable.

Farm Bureau made it possible for this little country boy to save many lives and to help make this world a little better place in which to live.●

REID BUNDY: A CAREER IN JOURNALISM

● Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as those who know me would confirm, I have a great deal of respect for the members of the press. In fact, so great is my regard for the value of the work they do that a career as a "newspaperman" was the first one I pursued right out of college. My view then, as now, was that the importance of the role of the press in a free society cannot be overstated.

The individuals who dedicate themselves to ensuring continuing coverage of local events deserve our thanks. One such individual, Reid Bundy of the Palos Verdes Peninsula News, deserves not only our gratitude, but also our best wishes. After nearly 40 years in journalism, Reid is retiring.

Although I do not wish to make my colleagues from Kansas jealous, Reid left their fine State to go to California in the years following World War II. As a student at the University of Southern California, he honed his journalistic skills as managing editor of the the Daily Trojan. After college, he settled in what is known as the South Bay area of Los Angeles County and contributed his knowledge and expertise to the Torrance-Herald, the Torrance Press-Herald, and the South Bay Daily Breeze from 1950 to 1972, when he became the editor of the paper from which he now retires. Over the last 40 years, Reid has also served his community through his leadership role on a number of civic and service organizations.

People who have committed themselves to serving their community in both their professional and their private lives deserve special recognition. I am very pleased to be able to help make sure that Reid Bundy gets the recognition he so definitely deserves. And I wish him the very best for a happy and healthy retirement.●

COMEBACK IN INDIAN COUNTRY

● Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article appearing in the October edition of Reader's Digest entitled, "Comeback in Indian Country."

The article highlights some of the most successful Indian economic development projects in the country today. I know there are many more tribes who are ready and willing to pursue business opportunities, but complicating their efforts are federal policies that present some of the most significant roadblocks to successful economic development. I believe flexible and consistent economic policies are needed—such as the bill I introduced, S. 1203, the Indian Economic Development Act of 1989—in order to assist Indian tribes to attract private sector investment. While I do not agree with every recommendation presented, this article focuses some long overdue attention on the success stories in Indian country and highlights problems in Federal Indian policy that merit our attention.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of the article entitled, "Comeback in Indian Country" appear immediately following my remarks.

The article follows:

(By Randy Fitzgerald)

Today the arid land that is home to the Ak-Chin Indians blooms a brilliant green, much as it did in their ancestors' time. The tribe had farmed the flat deserts of the Southwest for centuries—until 1947 when the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) took over management of their lands.

The BIA decided to lease out the arable portions of the Arizona reservation to non-Indians, returning—at best—$10,000 a year to the Ak-Chin. The tribe's several hundred members lived in huts made of railroad ties and mud, without electricity or running water. Lacking jobs or any control over their land, most had resigned themselves to a life of poverty.

But one family hadn't. In the early 1960s, Leona Kakar and her brothers asked the BIA not to renew the leases so the tribe could begin its own farming operation.

"You can't do that," a local BIA official admonished them. "Farming is too risky here. You'll fail!"

Ignoring this advice, Kakar's older brother, Richard Carlyle, secured a loan and borrowed farm equipment. He hired a local, non-Indian farmer as manager, and ultimately the tribe planted 2000 acres in cotton and grain. Within two years the operation began turning a profit, half of which was pumped back into the business and half into new tribal housing.

Meanwhile, Kakar contacted local BIA welfare offices. "If any people from our tribe come in, send them back to us if they can work, and we'll find them jobs." Soon the tribe's dependence on the government was broken.

Farm profits today exceed $1.5 million a year, a job is available for every tribal member who wants one, and almost every family boasts a modern home. "If we had listened to the BIA," Leona Kakar reflects, "we would still be nothing."

Across "Indian Country," islands of prosperity are emerging, the result of a revolution in attitudes. Native Americans are beginning to declare their economic independence.

Mississippi's Choctaw tribe has turned its reservation into an economic enterprise zone, with no natural resources, just people. Under the leadership of Chief Phillip Martin, the Choctaws attracted an electronics plant, a car-parts assembly factory and a greeting-card manufacturer to their reservation. Over 1,400 jobs have been created for people who had lived largely on welfare.

In Ledyard, Conn., the Mashantucket Pequot tribe operates numerous businesses, including a restaurant and a sand-and-gravel operation. Profits from these enterprises enable the tribe to employ all its members and to maintain its own roads and fire station.

The hills of northeastern Oklahoma are home to the country's second-largest tribe, the nearly 100,000-strong Cherokee nation. In 1975, 90 percent of all the tribe's income came from the government. Today, nearly 60 percent of Cherokee revenues are from its own enterprises and other tribally generated funds. Cherokee Nation Industries, Inc., grossed $24 million last year constructing military components. General Dynamics, one of the prime contractors, cited Cherokee Industries for producing "high-quality products with speed of delivery."

Bitter despair. Sadly, these islands of prosperity exist in a sea of privation. Most Indians have been trapped in a dependent welfare culture. According to the 1980 census, there are more than 1.5 million Native Americans, about half of whom live on or near the 304 reservations in the United States. More than one-third live below the poverty line. Unemployment on many reservations exceeds 65 percent. One in four Indian homes lack indoor plumbing. Alcoholism, crime and suicide are rampant.

And yet $3 billion in federal funds flows to the reservations annually. The Navajos, for example, received more than $250 million from the BIA alone last year. Without those funds, the reservation—25,000 square miles spread over four Southwestern states—would collapse. The nation's largest tribe has a per-capita annual income of about $2,400. Half the 200,000 Navajos are unemployed, and most of those with jobs are employed by the tribal government or local BIA offices.

Navajo lands, however, are abundant in resources. The reservation is estimated to hold up to 40 million tons of uranium, four billion tons of coal and millions of barrels of oil. But the wealth of this resource-rich land lies virtually untapped; its pastures are badly over-grazed; its people are bitter and despairing. Compounding the Navajo's problems is an overly bureaucratic tribal government, riddled with corrpution.

The Navajos' predicament is hardly unique. All tribal lands combined contain about 25 billion tons of surface coal reserves (approximately 15 percent of U.S. holdings) along with billions of dollars' worth of uranium, oil, gas and timber.

So why do the majority of Indian tribes remain among the poorest groups in the United States? In part, the blame lies with federal policy, which has undergone a dizzying series of reversals and contradictions.

Uncle Sam's Promises: By 1868 the last of 370 treaties between the tribes and the federal government had been signed. And though hostilities would continue for another two decades, most Indians were forcibly settled on the reservations designated for them—lands held in "trust," which Uncle Sam promised to protect and enhance.

Then, in 1887, Congress adopted a policy of assimilating Indians into American society. Although it was not widely implemented, the General Allotment Act called for elimination of collective tribal ownership of land. Each Indian family would receive a plot of 40 to 160 acres, and the tribes would be encouraged to become farmers. But most Indians lacked the capital or expertise to farm; many had to sell their lands just to survive. Others were swindled out of their property.

In 1934 this allotment policy was reversed by the Indian Reorganization Act. But by then Indian land holdings had shrunk from 136 million acres to less than 50 million.

Congress changed course once more in 1953 when it voted to terminate the government's special relationship with the tribes. Thousands of Indians were relocated to urban areas, an attempt to solve the reservations' economic problems by reducing their population. Ths strategy was also a failure.

"Termination" was quietly abandoned in the '60s, and an array of social-welfare programs was introduced, which further increased Indian dependence on government aid. Soon almost every reservation contained white-elephant projects, ranging from bankrupt furniture factories to abandoned motels, all foisted on the tribes by Washington. The Economic Development Administration built 37 "industrial development parks" on Indian lands. Nearly a decade after their construction, only two of them had achieved even a 50-percent occupancy rate; five had no tenants at all.

The federal government has invested a total of $30 billion over the past decade to lift reservations out of poverty. While some needed services have been provided, many projects and policies have failed because they were imposed from above, by bureaucracies. In contrast, the investments that have proved successful are the ones the tribes themselves made.

Tribal Enterprise. Along the Columbia River in Oregon, the Wasco and Warm Springs tribes lives as salmon fishermen and traders until 1857 when the government forcibly moved them over 90 miles south, away from the river, to a mountainous desert region of their land. Later joined by a band of Paiutes, they eked out a bare existence as farmers. In 1938 they organized themselves as the Confederated Tribes.

Jeff Sanders, a Wasco Indian who is now general manager in charge of public safety, grew up on the reservation in the '40s and '50s and remembers the tar-paper shacks without indoor plumbing or electricity.

But in one generation the lives of the Confederated Tribes were dramatically transformed. They turned themselves around by organizing their nearly 3000 members as a corporation in 1967, purchasing a sawmill (later building a plywood plant) and harvesting their own timber resources. Under the leadership of business manager Kenneth Smith, only the second member of his tribe to graduate from college, timber revenues were invested in a 160-room recreational resort and a home-building corporation.

In 1979 the tribe installed a hydroelectric generator in a dam on the Deschutes River, becoming the first tribe to receive a federal power license. Today Pacific Power and Light, a subsidiary of PacifiCorp, purchases electricity from the tribe, paying approximately $4 million a year.

Tribal enterprises employ 1200 people, and there's a job for every resident who is able to work. In 1988 revenues exceeded $65 million. "We now control our own destiny," says Sanders, proudly.

Another tribe with reason for pride is the Apache. A century ago, the Apache chief Geronimo surrendered to federal troops, marking the end of armed Indian resistance. Today the descendants of Geronimo maintain their fierce independence on nearly 720 square miles of the Sacramento Mountains in southern New Mexico.

"We are on the road to progress while preserving our heritage," explains Ouida Geronimo Miller, granddaughter of the legendary chief and director of tribal programs for children and the elderly. During her 60 years on the Mescalero Apache reservation, she has seen the tribe struggle to its feet, shedding the yoke of poverty by asserting its independence from federal policymakers.

Fortunes began to change for the Apache with the election of Wendell Chino as tribal president in 1953. In the tradition of strong leaders like Geronimo and Cochise, Chino used the pride and independence of his people to motivate them for economic self-determination. Throughout the '60s he battled the BIA's bureaucracy and their directives on such matters as how to use funding for education and community services.

In 1962 the tribe purchased a mountainous area next to the reservation that it hoped to turn into the southernmost ski resort in the United States. Some BIA officials predicted the venture would fail. Indians had never before been in the ski business. Yet within two decades the ski resort had to be expanded—from one lift to eight—because it was so jammed each weekend. In 1975 the Mescalero opened a $22-million luxury resort called Inn of the Mountains Gods, featuring a 250-room hotel, a 100-acre man-made lake, tennis courts and a golf course. The tribe opened a sawmill in 1987 to complement its logging operation and owns a herd of 4500 cattle.

No More Roadblocks. Four attributes separate successful tribes from their destitute brethren: strong, visionary leadership; a policy of keeping tribal politics out of business decisions; a willingness to hire non-Indian managers to run tribal enterprises as corporations; and determined independence from the federal bureaucracy.

If other tribes are to realize self-sufficiency, roadblocks, must be removed. Regulatory restrictions that obstruct Indian development of their natural resources should be lifted. Action could also be taken on a 1986 Interior Department task-force report that proposed turning reservations into enterprise zones, and offering tax incentives to companies that locate there. Such legislation has been introduced by Sen. John McCain (R., Ariz.), a member of the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

A 1984 Presidential Commission Report concluded that the BIA should be dismantled. The commission found that the BIA was moving too slowly in assisting tribes to gain more economic independence. The BIA controlled two-thirds of its $1-billion budget, while tribes had decision-making control over only 27 percent of BIA funds.

"The best thing that could happen would be for the tribes to direct the use of federal funding and to assume accountability for their decisions," says Ross Swimmer, who headed the BIA from 1985 to 1989 after a decade as chief of the Cherokee nation. "Abolish the BIA system because it keeps the tribes dependent. Let Native Americans be put in charge of helping themselves to achieve economic independence."

The successes of the Ak-Chin, the Apaches, the Cherokees and other tribes have shown that Native Americans are ready to venture into the economic marketplace on their own terms. As Chief Old Person of the Blackfeet says: "We will make mistakes. But they are less painful than suffering the consequences of other people's mistakes."●

RAOUL WALLENBERG

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the memory of Raoul Wallenberg, an honorary citizen of the United States, and an extraordinary man who risked his life to save thousands from the maw of the Nazi Holocaust. He issued Swedish passports to more than 15,000 Jews and indirectly helped approximately 100,000 Hungarian Jews to escape extermination. Today is Raoul Wallenberg Recognition Day, and it is proper and fitting that we observe this day. Raoul Wallenbeg personified all that is noble in the human spirit and he acted to frustrate the maniacal acts of those who personified the bestial possibilities still lurking in the hearts of men.

It is a terrible irony that when Hungary was liberated, Wallenberg was seized not by the Nazis but by the Soviet Union in violation of international standards of diplomatic immunity. He was taken to Lubianka prison in Moscow. He was never released and his fate has never been established. The Soviet Union has refused to investigate reports that he is still alive, maintaining that he died in prison at the age of 35.

I take this occasion to remind my colleagues that I have offered Senate Concurrent Resolution 60 which expresses the sense of the Senate that the Soviet Union should at long last cooperate in an investigation of Raoul Wallenberg's fate, including releasing his prison records. I urge those of my colleagues who have not yet joined as cosponsors of this resolution to do so.●

THE AFRICA GROWTH FUND

● Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, sub-Saharan Africa's struggle to develop is a problem that has challenged the international community over the years. As chairman and now ranking member of the Subcommittee on Africa, I have followed these efforts closely.

One of the keys to development and recovery in Africa is a vigorous private sector. In recognition of this, I am pleased to announce that last week the Overseas Private Investment Corporation launched an initiative, the Africa Growth Fund, to help develop the undercapitalized African private sector.

The Africa Growth Fund is a new concept in international venture capital financing. It will provide up to $30 million in loans and guarantees to stimulate private investment in sub-Saharan Africa. Initially, Africa Growth Fund services will be available in some 40 African countries with which OPIC has reached bilateral agreements for offering its political risk insurance.

The fund was announced last week by Fred M. Zeder, President and Chief Executive Officer of OPIC. I would like to include Mr. Zeder's remarks about the fund and the importance of private sector development in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

AFRICA GROWTH FUND, INAUGURAL RECEPTION, SEPTEMBER 26, 1989

(Remarks of Hon. Fred M. Zeder)

INTRODUCTION

Welcome Ambassadors, president N'Diaye of the African Development Bank, delegates to the Annual Meetings of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, Members of the United States Congress, Members of the Board of Directors of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, clients of OPIC, friends, and particularly the owners and management of the Africa Growth Fund.

As I am sure you all know, we are here this afternoon in these magnificent surroundings to celebrate an historic undertaking by American business—the inauguration of the Africa Growth Fund.

This is not a casually conceived enterprise. This Fund is the natural result of our realization that Africa is a continent going through a profound economic change, a change that offers opportunities for sustainable growth based on the transfer of technology, of know-how, and of competitive access to world markets for quality goods and services.

This economic growth will bring benefits to people throughout Africa in the form of more and better-paying jobs, heightened demand for goods and services from small firms across the continent, and increased revenues to pay for social services: modern schools, health care and hospitals, and up-to-date communications reaching all the people with information they need to make democracy work.

THE AFRICAN GROWTH FUND

The Growth Fund is precisely the right type of operation to spark this dynamic economic activity in Africa. First, because it is privately owned and privately managed, it will be able to be more creative and flexible than a rigidly structured government agency. It can help African and U.S. business react quickly and effectively to the business opportunities that the policy changes in Africa are creating.

Second, it can help start and expand efficient business operations to produce goods and services that people need and are willing to pay for. It will mean that Africa can be competitive without subsidizing business and consumers and thereby diverting scarce resources from essential public services. It is self sustaining.

Third, this Fund will be professionally managed for success—supporting sound business ventures. The highest priority will be given to solid business planning, care for the quality of products and services, and responsiveness to—market demands—what customers need and want. Where there is a human need, there is a human opportunity; and where there's opportunity, there's investment; and with investment, there's sustained economic growth.

Finally, the Africa Growth Fund will be an equity investor. Occasionally, we forget that sub-Saharan Africa, no less than Latin America, Eastern Europe, and some other areas, suffers from a superabundance of loans and a scarcity of successful, equity-funded business enterprises to earn the money with which to service their debt. The Africa Growth Fund, the first regional equity investment company—anywhere—to be formed in the past twenty years, addresses that problem.

AFRICAN BUSINESSMEN'S ROUNDTABLE

Of course, economic growth in Africa depends on African investment. And I was pleased to learn from Babacar N'Diaye about the steps he is taking to highlight private investment and private sector growth. I understand that he has engaged 25 outstanding independent businessmen in Africa to advise the bank; and he is planning to lead them on a visit to the States early next year. OPIC will be pleased to support this endeavor and to play a welcoming role for their visit. I am sure that our friends from the Africa Growth Fund will also be part of your welcome committee.

IN SUMMATION

I sense a new day in Africa. The leadership of the private sector is making itself heard, and it is producing results * * * results that will benefit all Africans over many years ahead. The Africa Growth Fund will be part of this. American business and industry will be a part of this. So will OPIC.

The U.S. Agency for International Development is also actively involved in this worthy undertaking, and I want to express the appreciation of all of us associated with the development of the Fund for their timely financial support in helping assure its realization.

A great debt of gratitude is owed to the owners of the Africa Growth Fund for their energies and their judgment: the Coca-Cola Company, the Lummus Company, Citicorp and Citibank, the Rockefeller family, and your company, Tom Ryan, M.W. Kellogg.

Thanks, too, to Citicorp Investment Bank, the Fund's private sector financial advisor, Vice presidents Michael Clare and Douglas Warwick, who worked tirelessly in helping us to put the Fund together; and finally the Equator organization, which has given us incredible, long-term support through its extraordinary commitment to creating this Fund, their long and detailed knowledge of Africa, and the unqualified professionalism of president Frank Kennedy, Vice presidents Tom Wescott and Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf, and the ever-present Kenneth Locklin, who has emerged to become the Fund's day-to-day operational manager.●

IN RECOGNITION OF CHINESE DOUBLE 10 DAY

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise today to honor a trusted and valued ally to the United States. The Republic of China will be celebrating its national day of independence on October 10, otherwise known as Double 10 Day, and I wish to extend the good wishes of this body and those of the American people to the people of that nation.

The Republic of China has been a bastion of economic opportunity and a staunch friend of the United States and a defender of our national security interests throughout the Pacific Rim basin.

Nowhere have our bonds been stronger than in the areas of commerce and trade. The Republic of China has grown vastly within the past two decades to become an economic power rivaling other Asian nations such as Japan and the Republic of Korea. That economic relationship has been especially close between California and the Republic of China.

The growing importance of open and free trade has become more apparent as we move further into a unified, global marketplace. Even though Congress passed a 1,000-page trade bill giving new powers to the President to break down protectionist barriers locking out United States businesses from foreign markets, the Republic of China has not been a nation that violates the goodwill and trust of the American people.

I have no doubt many of these new initiatives will strain relations with our closest friends and trading partners, but we can rest assured that the relationship enjoyed by our two nations will continue to be strong and resilient.

What I have been especially proud of has been the cultural exchange between our two peoples and the attendant benefits. It is fitting that we also celebrate the 200th anniversary of Chinese immigration to the United States.

Americans of Chinese descent have contributed much not only to California, but to the entire Nation through their thrift, hard work, and intelligence. Their traits are as admirable and deserving of commendation as those of our own forefathers as they set foot in the New World so many years ago.

Chinese-Americans have risen to great heights of prominence within our society and they continue to contribute to our economy, culture, and humanity.

Underlying this relationship, though, is our common and determined opposition to the type of totalitarian extremism that has been practiced across the sea in the People's Republic of China.

On June 4, the world witnessed the terrible price people who yearn for freedom have paid all too often throughout history. The people of Hong Kong and the Republic of China have just cause to fear for the future when they are given such a barbaric and cruel glimpse of it.

The United States remains committed to its security alliances with the Republic of China and we shall not shrink from the responsibility to our friends. We will always be reminded of that warm spring day when the grown children of Mao's cultural revolution began a quiet one of their own by stating that armed force cannot be a substitute for freedom.

The students of Tiananmen Square have shown that tanks and truncheons cannot bury the hopes for liberty that burn in the hearts of millions of Chinese. From Beijing to Tibet, youngsters, workers, mothers, and monks have raised their voices on behalf of tolerance and pluralism before the gun barrels of the world's largest communist power.

The United States and the Republic of China are tied together by the hope and promise that freedom and peace bring to each of our peoples.

It is my hope that our two nations and people will continue the rich and fruitful relationships that we have nurtured together. On this anniversary of their national day of celebration, I urge this body and the people of the United States to wish our neighbors and friends across the Pacific another 100 Double 10 Day celebrations.●

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, on October 5, 1981, Raoul Wallenberg was declared an honorary citizen of the United States, an honor bestowed on only three other people in U.S. history. This year, President Bush signed a law designating October 5, 1989, as "Raoul Wallenberg Recognition Day." I would, therefore, like to take this time today to recognize the heroic achievements of this extraordinary individual.

What makes Raoul Wallenberg so extraordinary was his willingness to immerse himself in the horror of World War II. A member of an aristocratic family in Sweden, Raoul Wallenberg easily could have remained unassociated with the war. Instead, Raoul chose to accept the request of both the United States and Swedish Governments in 1944 to serve as the First Secretary at the Swedish Legation in Budapest, Hungary. His assignment was simply to save as many Jews as possible from the Nazis. With an almost superhuman effort, Raoul did just that: He saved thousands of Jews from the Holocaust.

Raoul Wallenberg was creative in his rescue approach. In his official capacity, he declared numerous large apartment buildings to be extensions of the Swedish Embassy. In these "safe houses" he set up soup kitchens, hospitals, orphanages, and schools. In addition to this, he saved Jews already bound for death camps by pulling them off trains and helping them to escape. One of the most incredible achievements was the saving of over 70,000 Jews in a single night by helping to reverse an order given by Eichmann.

Another example of Wallenberg's heroism was his redesign of the pass that allowed Jews who could prove they had relatives in Sweden to be placed under Swedish protection. This new design, which was more official looking, fooled many Nazis and prevented the deportation of many of its bearers.

When the advancing Russian Army reached the city of Budapest, 120,000 Hungarian Jews were still alive—the largest surviving Jewish population in all of occupied Europe. Unfortunately, Raoul was unable to save himself. In 1945, he was arrested by Russian soldiers. His fate is still unknown to this day.

Raoul Wallenberg was a light to thousands during the dark days of the Holocaust. His heroic achievements impress upon us the need and the wish to honor him today on the anniversary of his becoming an honorary U.S. citizen.●

A resolution (S. Res. 191) to recognize the bicentennial of the American Morgan Horse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to submit today a resolution commemorating the bicentennial of the American Morgan horse.

Two hundred years ago, shortly after the birth of our Nation, the first Morgan horse was born in Springfield, MA. This was the beginning of a strong new breed of horses that went on to serve this country as part of the military in every subsequent major American war through the 1940's. The Morgan was found to be an intelligent, hearty, versatile, and easily trained breed, making it well suited for the needs of the military.

The Government continued to raise this horse until the 1940's when the last Government-owned and operated breeding farm was closed. The service of the Morgan horse in the civilian sector has also proven to be invaluable. Many Americans have benefited from its labors by means of farming, logging, carriage drawing, as police mounts, and in handicapped riding programs. They are also proudly displayed for their beauty, talent and dexterity at equestrian shows and exhibitions across the country.

Today there are approximately 115,000 registered American Morgan horses throughout the United States. In my State of Delaware alone, there are total of 172 horses. This horse symbolizes the great pride of this country in being a breed of horse characterized by courage, strength and endurance and is an authentic and important part of our American heritage. I ask you to join me in supporting this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 191) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution and its preamble are as follows:

S. RES. 191

Whereas the American Morgan Horse is the only horse perpetuated as a breed by the United States Government at a Government breeding farm for use by the military;

Whereas the American Morgan Horse served in every major American war from the 1800's through the 1940's and should be recognized for its contribution to America like any other war hero;

Whereas the American Morgan Horse served as this country's early American work horse, clearing the land, plowing the fields, and settling the West;

Whereas the American Morgan Horse is the progenitor of America's light horse breeds and was used to contribute to the development of the American Saddlebred horse, the Standardbred, and the American Quarterhorse;

Whereas the American Morgan Horse continues to serve the people of this country in a variety of ways including farming, cattle ranching and recreation; and

Whereas the American Morgan Horse provides entertainment and sport to Americans in all 50 States as well as foreign countries by means of trail and endurance rides, carriage driving, showing, dressage, western riding, hunter/jumpers and serving the handicapped riding programs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the period commencing October 9, 1989, and ending October 15, 1989, is designated as "National Morgan Horse Week", and the President is requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe such period with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

THE FIGHT FOR FREEDOM AND DEMOCRACY IN BURMA

HON. C. CHRISTOPHER COX

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert into the RECORD the text of a speech by Ms. Paula Dobriansky entitled "The Fight for Freedom and Democracy in Burma." It details the terrible abuse of human rights by the military dictatorship in Burma. Further, this speech sheds much light on the plight of the democratic Burmese students who fled to the Thai-Burma border following the violent suppression of prodemocracy demonstrations 1 year ago.

Paula Dobriansky is the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights. She delivered this speech on September 19, 1989, before the Federation for Human Rights and Democracy in Burma.

Ms. Dobriansky's insight into the situation in Burma is well worth each Member's close attention.

(Speech by Ms. Paula Dobriansky)

A year ago, on September 18-19, the world witnessed bloodshed and violence on the streets of Rangoon. These tragic events were not an isolated episode in Burmese history. For a long time, the legitimate democratic aspiration of the Burmese peoples have been neglected and suppressed. In fact, since 1962, a repressive military government has ruled Burma, without either obtaining a mandate from the people or even respecting fundamental human rights. Large-scale indiscriminate killings, torture and arbitrary detentions have marked the regime's standard response to Burmese citizens' peaceful attempts to express their desire—and fundamental right—for a return to a multi-party democratic system. Regrettably, the most recent demonstrations culminated in yet another military crackdown.

While repression is not new in Burma, the extent of the repression of 1988 was unprecedented. Burmese law proscribes summary executions and the tenets of Buddhism—a faith with many followers in Burma—stress the sanctity of life. Yet, throughout 1988, lethal force was indiscriminately used by the dictatorial regime to crush peaceful demonstrations and expressions of political sentiment. In March and June alone, hundreds of courageous students paid with their lives to protest ruthless police brutality, repression of political rights and the government's mishandling of the Burmese economy. In August 1988, in just five days, reportedly more than 2,000 Burmese died at the hands of their government, although precise numbers will never be known. Only a month later in September, the military again indiscriminately fired without warning on peaceful, unarmed demonstrators—who were merely expressing their political beliefs. On those two tragic days, some 1,000 persons were killed. Ironically, as it was suppressing any opposition to its repressive rule by the massive application of force, the military leadership also announced its intention to relinquish power shortly and vowed to hold multi-party elections. As we know, these promises were not fulfilled.

Since last year, the military regime has also sought to stamp out political opposition. By decree, gatherings of more than four persons are considered illegal and within only the last two months, thousands of members of the opposition political parties have been arrested in military roundups throughout the country. The entire leadership of the People's Progressive Party, and members of the Executive Committee of the League of Democratic Allies have been imprisoned. The regime has actively blocked the activities of Burma's most energetic, popular and respected political leader, Aung San Suu Kyi, the daughter of Burmese national hero Aung San. As the leader of Burma's largest opposition political party, the National League for Democracy, she has been under house arrest since July 20.

The regime's crackdown on dissent has been pervasive and ruthless. Torture, beatings and mistreatment of political prisoners are frequent and in some instances have resulted in death. In a number of cases, prisoners are crowded into small cells, knee deep in water or forced to stand in water while being interrograted. Sleep deprivation, beatings resulting in severe eye and ear injures, electric shock to the genitals and other reprehensive torture tactics appear to be routine methods for questioning.

In addition, the judicial system, the police, and penal institutions have lost any semblance of independence, and have been turned into instruments of oppression. In July, local military commanders were bestowed with summary powers of trial and execution, resulting in accused persons being deprived of any legal means to defend themselves. Military tribunals, composed of people completely lacking in legal training, make the final determination on all cases, political or criminal. Defense lawyers are severely limited in what they are allowed to say and reportedly under warning that too vigorous a defense can result in negative consequences for both the client and the lawyer.

Human rights abuses have also continued to be inflicted upon the ethnic insurgents. For many years, the military has rounded up ethnic minorites and have pressed them into service as porters forced to carry heavy supplies and to walk in the vanguard of troops when ambushes, booby traps, or minefields were expected. Reports abound that following the military takeover of last September, the Burmese military has been using young ethnic Burmans for forced labor.

As a result of the continuing reprehensible violations of human rights, from three- to four-thousand Burmese students now find refuge in the Thailand-Burma border area. Any who have not fled the cities remain subject to arrest, torture and possible execution. Many of those who voluntarily returned to Rangoon in the aftermath of the coup were allegedly executed.

The 1988 coup dealt our hopes for progress toward democracy in Burma a severe setback. The Burmese people today live in a repressive, military state where political and civil liberties are restricted, allegations of torture, arbitrary detentions, and executions abound, and the general living conditions are extremely poor.

Given these egregious human rights abuses and the suffering of the Burmese people, what are the prospects for free and fair elections next May, as promised by the present Burmese government? With the regime's campaign to eradicate any free political expression or opposition, it is difficult to conceive how a fair election will be held in May. Additionally, the government has taken steps to implement the election law in a way which appears to favor the National Unity Party, the successor to the Burma Socialist Program Party. The government has also stated that only elections to a Constituent Assembly will be held in May, with the military remaining in power until a new constitution is ratified.

Despite the rigid controls placed on society and brutal punishments meted out to members of the opposition, the courageous Burmese people have not been deterred in their struggle for freedom and democracy. Strong, relentless appeals for democratic change and reform ring loudly throughout Burma. This attitude is not surprising—courage and perseverance are traditional traits of the Burmese people.

What can and should the United States do to help the Burmese people in their valiant fight for freedom and democracy? Appropriately, the United States' response following the government's bloody crackdown on the demonstration last year was to suspend all U.S. economic and military assistance to Burma. In addition, we have repeatedly raised directly with the Burmese authorities and also in our public statements our concern about human rights violations in Burma. Throughout, we have sought to enlist the support of other nations. And our efforts have borne fruit. Other democracies and international organizations have joined us in criticizing Burmese human rights violations and demanding a return to democracy.

For example, earlier this year, the United Nations Human Rights Commission issued a statement calling for the Burmese Government to take the necessary steps to assure human rights and fundamental freedoms of the people of Burma. The Commission will also review cases of alleged human rights abuses when the full Commission meets in February and March of 1990. Meanwhile, on September 8, the European Community released a strong statement expressing its concern about the worsening human rights conditions and requesting that the Burmese authorities end repression and respect the Burmese people's desire to establish a democratic society through free elections.

Aside from our concern about continued human rights violations in Burma, we have been mindful of the plight of Burmese students who have taken temporary refuge in Thailand and near the Thai-Burmese border. We support the provision of continued timely humanitarian assistance to them to ease their stay. Private voluntary organizations functioning through the Burma Coordinating Group, are attempting to meet their existing needs. Despite these endeavors, such items as malaria pills, mosquito netting, food, essential medical commodities remain in short supply. We believe that these efforts deserve backing and are exploring ways to assist them.

We are also committed to allowing entry into the United States of those Burmese who meet the criteria for refugee or parolee status. Several Burmese have already arrived in the United States under humanitarian parole status.

For years, the heroic Burmese people have been deprived of the opportunity to exercise their right of self-determination. Nevertheless it is clear that using brute force against peaceful demonstrations is not the answer. No oppression, however awesome, can forever deny to the people the realization of their fundamental human and political aspirations. As Thomas Jefferson said, "the desire for freedom is universal." History, through the passions and energies of freedom-loving men and women has a way of rejecting sooner or later, non-viable ideas and solutions. Sooner or later the dream of the Burmese people will be realized. It is toward this goal that we should all strive.

INTRODUCTION OF THE INTERNATIONAL AND SOUTH PACIFIC FORESTRY COOPERATION ACT OF 1989

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, there is a growing awareness of the need to protect, preserve, and properly manage the world's tropical forests. It is becoming increasingly apparent that the quality of life of mankind is being threatened by the rapid loss of tropical rain forests worldwide.

Much of the deforestation is due to the sheer growth of the world's population and the accompanying pressures to meet basic needs. Wood remains as a basic source of fuel for cooking and heating for much of the developing countries. Forests are cleared to provide additional acreage for cash crops and to raise cattle. The expansion of cities are encroaching upon heavily forested areas.

The demand to fulfill the basic needs of mankind is understandable and a natural consequence of our growing and developing planet. It is unrealistic to believe that countries will not continue to tap their tropical forestry resources to some degree. The outright preservation of tropical forests in their untouched state should be a major portion of all countries' tropical forestry management plans. However, a sound and balanced tropical forestry management regime should be utilized for acreage already disturbed and under pressure to be used.

There exists fast-growing species of trees that can be cultivated and harvested for fuel. The technology of agroforestry is developing many new methods for growing crops and raising cattle in and among forests; multiple uses reduces the need to disturb untouched tropical forests. Certain types of fast-growing trees have been and are being identified that can be planted to provide timber for construction and thereby lessening the demand for wood milled from tropical forests.

A well-planned approach is needed if the United States is to substantively assist other countries in conserving and managing their tropical forestry resources. While our domestic institute of tropical forests in Puerto Rico was established many years ago to assist in tropical forestry research and education in the Western Hemisphere, and separate legislation has been introduced to focus on augmenting the facilities and capacity of that institute, there exists a great need to focus assistance upon the large topical forestry belt below the Equator that extends across the South Pacific.

I am introducing legislation today to provide the authority necessary for certain Government departments and agencies to assist in tropical forestry research and education in the South Pacific; and, to share existing and new techniques and information with the countries of the South Pacific.

The legislation provides for the establishment of the South Pacific Tropical Forestry Research and Education Center in coordination with the land grant college of American Samoa Community College. American Samoa is located south of the Equator and in the center of the South Pacific. American Samoa has close historical, cultural, and linguistic ties with most of the countries of the South Pacific and represents an ideal location to train specialists from other countries. The training will be done at a United States institution and at reasonable costs due to the relatively close proximity of Samoa to the rest of the Pacific countries and the established transportation links across the Pacific from American Samoa's international airport.

The bill also provides for the establishment of the American Samoa experimental forest. The islands have sizable tropical forestry acreage that is undisturbed as well as additional acreage that is being used. One of the most important actions that the United States can take to demonstrate leadership in the conservation of tropical forests is to provide for the proper management of our own domestic acreage. The American Samoa experimental forest will enable those individuals who are engaged in research and education to have actual test plots in which to learn and demonstrate. Specialists from other countries can verify the actual methods used and progress made in agroforestry and tropical forestry management.

The legislation calls upon certain departments to cooperate and consult in the execution of these tropical forestry initiatives in the South Pacific. Through the coordinated leadership of the Secretaries of Agriculture, Interior, and State, the United States can implement tropical forestry management and outreach efforts which are culturally sensitive, environmentally sound and cost effective. Efficient results are critical given today's fiscal constraints and the absolute necessity to take action that will actually improve the environment. The extension of specific international authority to the Secretary of Agriculture is seen as necessary to carry out the objectives of tropical forestry outreach.

I want to acknowledge the wide support of many of my colleagues in agreeing to cosponsor this legislation. It is fortunate indeed to have a sizable number of Members who have witnessed first hand the pressing need to provide constructive assistance in the conservation and management of the region's vast tropical forestry resources. I believe the implementation of the provisions of the International and South Pacific Forestry Cooperation Act of 1989 will significantly contribute to the protection of an extremely important component of our world's ecosystem: Tropical forests.

KHALISTAN—THE ONLY SOLUTION TO THE PUNJAB PROBLEM

HON. BEN GARRIDO BLAZ

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BLAZ. Mr. Speaker, around the world people are fighting to be free of despots. Today, in India, one of the major struggles for freedom in the world is taking place. It is the struggle of the Sikh nation to gain independence from the government of India.

The Sikhs ruled the Punjab from 1770 to 1849, when the British conquered the Punjab. When India won its independence from the British, there were three political parties recognized for the transfer of power: the Muslim League Party represented the Muslims; the Akali Party represented the Sikhs; and the Hindus were represented by the Congress Party.

In 1947, when India became indpendent, a separate country, Pakistan, was formed purely on the basis of religion, Islam. India was created for the Hindus and the Sikhs agreed to take the Punjab as their homeland, with the solemn assurance from the Hindu leaders, Nehru and Mahatma Gandhi, that the Sikhs would be treated as equals in a free India.

As soon as India became independent, the majority Congress Party broke all its promises of justice and equality made to the Sikhs prior to independence. The two Sikh representatives to the Indian constitutional convention refused to sign the final draft of the constitution because it contained no guarantee of the rights of minorities. In the Indian Constitution today, the Sikh religion is not recognized, while Hinduism and Islam are.

Mr. Speaker, as we can see, the worst fears of the Sikhs have been realized. Today they are a hunted and severely persecuted people. Their most sacred religious shrine, the Golden Temple in Amritsar, was attacked by a military force of the Indian army in 1984. As the slaughter and persecution of Sikhs increased, Sikh leaders declared their independence from India on October 7, 1987, and severed all relations with the Indian Constitution. They called their new nation Khalistan.

They did this because they recognized that it was the only means of survival available to them. Since then India has only redoubled its efforts to break their spirit and kill their patriots. I, for one, endorse that right of the Sikh people to self-determination and the pursuit of life, liberty, and religious freedom. The Young Republican Federation has recently endorsed this right of the Sikhs for freedom and independence as well. I stand with them in support of this courageous people and their God-given right to live their lives free from persecution and oppression.

Today the people of Khalistan, the Skihs, face the devastation of genocide at the hands of the police and paramilitary forces of the Indian Government. These forces are essentially an army of occupation.

Over 80,000 Sikhs—men, women, and children have been murdered since 1984, mainly by this paramilitary army of occupation, but also by frenzied mobs whipped up into a murderous, anti-Sikh furor by known instigators of the Indian Government. Some of those instigators, who triggered the New Delhi massacre of Sikhs in 1984, now hold cabinet positions in the Indian Government.

We often hear the Indian Government blaming the Sikhs for every act of violence in the Punjab or elsewhere in India or even terrorist acts abroad. The evidence suggests otherwise. We now have written a book called Soft Target. This book shows that India's secret intelligence service, "The Third Agency," engineered the terrorist bombing of an Air-India jetliner in 1985—a bombing previously blamed on the Sikhs.

It is becoming harder and harder for New Delhi to blame the Sikhs when India's own newspapers are every day exposing brutal police and parliamentary atrocities against innocent Sikhs in the Punjab. We are not talking about isolated cases here. We are talking about a well-documented assault on an entire culture, religion and race in which police are daily gang-raping Sikh teenage girls, torturing mothers, arresting young Sikh men for torture interrogations in torture centers all over the Punjab. They are killing those young men in faked shoot-outs with police after which the bodies are often cremated to destroy evidence of their torture and murder.

Punjab, homeland of the Sikhs, is today a completely lawless place. So-called antiterrorist laws put on the books by New Delhi since 1984 now give police the right to pick up Sikhs at will and to torture Sikh women in their own homes, while their husbands sit hopelessly in jail without trial or legal recourse. The Punjab Human Rights Organization, headed by the hightly respected former Indian High Court judge, Justice A. Bains, has just released a report from the Punjab which states that over 7,000 young Sikh men have been murdered in the last 2 years in so-called "faked encounters" with Punjab police and paramilitary troops. That is about 10 murders per day. I ask you, who are the terrorists in the Punjab?

Justice Bains' organization also states that there are over 15,000 Sikh political prisoners in Punjab jails who have no hope of trial for at least three years. This is the world's so-called "largest democracy," as India's Ambassador to the United States is so often heard saying?

Enough of this talk of democracy in India while the Sikhs are being slaughtered and tortured all over their homeland. Let the Sikhs enjoy the same freedom we Americans so cherish.

Mr. Speaker, I insert into the RECORD an article from India-West verifying that the Young Republicans have indeed endorsed independence for the Sikhs as well as freedom fighters throughout the world:

[From the India-West, Aug. 4, 1989]

YOUNG REPUBLICANS SUPPORT INDEPENDENT STATE FOR SIKHS BY SUNITA SOHRABJI

WASHINGTON.—The national organization of Young Republicans last month adopted a policy that supports an independent state for Sikhs.

At their national convention in Nashville, Tenn., the Young Republicans, as part of their 1989 platform, adopted a passage July 19 that reads: "The tradition of this nation, dating back to the Declaration of Independence and our revolution, is to support the right of people to revolt against tyranny."

The passage then called for enhanced aid to opposition factions in Nicaragua, Afghanistan, Angola, Ethiopia, and South Yemen and "all other peoples fighting communist and totalitarian opposition," and concluded, "We reaffirm our support for Sikh self-determination in the Punjab."

Alan Dubow, deputy counsel for the organization, told India-West the Young Republicans had supported an independent state for Sikhs since their last convention in 1987, and had written the resolution passed at that time into their policy this year.

Dubow said Dr. Gurmit Singh Aulakh, president of the Council of Khalistan in Washington, had attended the national conventions of the organization since 1985, and had brought information of "terrorism" against Sikhs by the Indian government.

COMMUNIST GOVERNMENT

"We feel that this group of people are having their rights abridged by a Communist influenced government," said Dubow, adding the organization thus supported the rights of Sikhs for an independent homeland.

Dubow said the Young Republicans have many connections with the Republican members of Congress, and the organization will attempt to put their policy into action by asking Republican members of Congress to support measures that deal with the issue.

He referred specifically to a measure currently before the House, sponsored by Representative Wally Herger, R-Calif., that would do away with India's most favored nation trading status for alleged human rights violations.

Aulakh called the move "a tremendous breakthrough," saying, "It is wonderful to find friends of freedom among these young Americans, who are on fire for liberty and who have not grown complacent though they were born free in a free land."

In a speech before convention delegates July 16, Aulakh said since 1984, over 80,000 Sikh men, women and children have been killed by Indian police or paramilitaries.

NEUTRALIZED MILITARY

"Let me assure you, my friends, as fellow Americans, and on behalf of the entire Sikh nation, that as soon as the Sikhs achieve freedom in a free Khalistan, India's military powers will be neutralized overnight," Aulakh told the convention delegates, adding, "in a free Khalistan, the U.S.A. will have access to military bases and other necessary defense arrangements."

HON. JOE BARTON

OF TEXAS

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise before my colleagues today in memory of an outstanding member of the national and international music community. Ms. Julia Smith Vielehr passed away on April 27, 1989. Her untimely death was just days before she was to attend the premiere of her latest opera, "The Cockrow" in Fort Worth, TX.

Best known by her professional name, Ms. Julia Smith was an award-winning composer whose compositions have been performed by the New York Philharmonic and symphony orchestras in Baltimore, San Francisco, Oklahoma City, Toledo, Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston, Cleveland and other U.S. cities. Several European orchestras have also performed her works.

Ms. Smith was born and raised in Denton, TX. She attended the University of North Texas and wrote the alma mater when she was a sophomore in 1922. In 1970, she was named a distinguished alumna of the university. After graduating from the University of North Texas, she attended the Julliard School of Music.

An outstanding role model for all Texans, Ms. Smith's first opera, "Cynthia Parker" premiered at north Texas in 1939. She wrote a total of five operas, including "Daisy," which was based on the life of the founder of the Girl Scouts of America. In 1965, she composed "Remember the Alamo," for Lyndon B. Johnson's inauguration concert. This year she was honored by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers for 50 years of service.

The passing of Ms. Julia Smith Vielehr is a great loss to the world of music, but she leaves behind her work that the American people will enjoy forever.

TRIBUTE TO DR. MOSES GROSSMAN

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues a special event occuring in San Francisco.

Today, October 5, 1989, a new center is opening up in San Francisco which integrates psychosocial and health care services for children placed in protected custody by the department of social services. This new child protective center will be located at San Francisco General Hospital and will be dedicated to Moses Grossman, MD.

Dr. Grossman has been teaching pediatrics at the University of California, San Francisco School of Medicine since 1951. He is the chief of pediatrics at San Francisco General Hospital and has been the vice chairman of the department of pediatrics since 1970.

Dr. Grossman has a long list of contributions in the area of advocacy for children. He was integral in establishing the first child abuse council in California in the early 1970's and served on the California Child Abuse Prevention Advisory Committee from 1976 to 1985.

He is a well known expert in childhood infectious disease; his current focus is on childhood immunization and HIV. He serves as a State and local consultant on pediatric HIV infection.

Moses Grossman's tireless advocacy, and countless years of service in all areas of children's health are recognized today with the opening of the Moses Grossman Child Protection Center which would not exist without his leadership and commitment to interdisciplinary care for abused and neglected children.

SOUTH KOREA'S MODEL INTERNATIONAL ADOPTION PROGRAM

HON. LOUISE M. SLAUGHTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, the South Korean Government has recently enacted a restrictive policy on international adoptions that will severely curtail, and may eventually reduce to zero, the number of South Korean children who can be adopted by American families. Unfortunately, the South Korean Government's actions have been spurred by irresponsible media reports criticizing the Government's adoption policy.

This negative media attention is unfortunate not only because it has had devastating results but because it is unwarranted. According to many adoption specialists, South Korea is a model for intercountry adoption. Foreign adoptions fall under the purview of four agencies licensed and regulated by the Seoul government. Very strict guidelines must be followed when choosing adoptive parents.

Orphaned South Korean children should not be denied an opportunity to have a family. United States and South Korean immigration statistics show that about 10,000 South Korean infants are annually placed in orphanages. According to the National Committee for Adoption, 2 million American couples would like to adopt. Many of these couples would welcome a South Korean infant with warm and loving arms. In my district, in Rochester, NY, over 500 families have already adopted South Korean children. Many others are eager to do so.

I call upon all my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join with me in praising the humanitarian goals of international adoption and the South Korean Government's efforts to place its orphaned children in loving, caring families.

THE STATUS OF THE STRATEGIC ARMS TALKS: PAYOFF FOR "PRUDENCE"

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, the recent Wyoming summit produced results that far exceed most expectations. The progress at Jackson Hole seems particularly significant for from the very first the Bush administration has made it clear that negotiations on conventional forces in Europe would be the focus of U.S. efforts.

The Wyoming summit is significant because the Soviets have now agreed to delink strategic arms negotiations from the strategic defense initiative. As long as the Soviets linked the two, no progress in START could be achieved. In addition, the Soviets agreed to dismantle the Krasnoyarsk radar, an installation that unambiguously violated the ABM Treaty and which has for years been one of several obstacles to progress in arms negotiations. These moves by the Soviets are welcomed and a healthy sign.

Major areas of negotiation remains. SDI is still a crucial concern of the Soviets. The question of an appropriate deployment scheme for mobile missiles must be resolved. The role of conventional and nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles remains to be settled. The issue of airlaunched cruise missiles [ALCM] and bomb loads for strategic bombers needs to be negotiated. Countless details of a proper verification and compliance scheme must still be hammered out.

Despite the number of unresolved issues, there is reason for great hope. Some issues, such as the SDI and SLCM's may well be handed outside of a START agreement. The remaining issues are matters that can be resolved if the United States and the Soviet Union make a good-faith effort to reach agreement—and Secretary Baker and Mr. Shevardnadze have made it clear they are willing to make the effort.

Mr. Speaker, this Member would note a September 26, 1989 editorial in the Washington Post entitled "Payoff for 'Prudence'." This perceptive essay highlights the extent to which President Bush and General Secretary Gorbachev have moved their nations toward a common goal—the goal of reducing strategic nuclear inventories and superpower tensions and arms expenditures.

PAYOFF FOR "PRUDENCE"

President Bush's "prudent" approach to Moscow has led to a harvest of concessions that may produce the very strategic arms treaty that doubters had feared was beyond his political reach. This was unquestionably the chief result—and an extremely important one—of Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze's meetings last week with the president and secretary of state. A Soviet-American connection that the minister had found dulled by American "timidity" just two weeks ago he now pronounces to be moving "energetically" on a broad front. Although plenty of difficulties remain, it appears Mr. Bush is putting his own mark on the superpower relationship. His first summit is now due next year.

In arms control, Mr. Bush had given early priority to conventionl reductions in Europe rather than the stategic cuts his predecessor pursued in the Start talks. The emphasis on conventional forces fitted the new circumstances of a turbulent Europe, and had the additional political benefit of postponing any clash with the Republican right. Deeply suspicious of Start, this element threatens to carve up any Start treaty not to its liking.

Mr. Bush's hestitation posed a real problem to Mikhail Gorbachev, who has made Start central to is plans to redirect Soviet resources. He has now united some part of that knot by proposing that two major unresolved issues in Start—Star Wars and SLCMs—be handled outside a treaty.

In no longer demanding that an agreement on defense in space be written into an agreement to limit offensive weapons, Mr. Gorbachev does not flash a green light to Star Wars or to the more modest versions of it favored in the Bush administration. But he seems to acknowledge the general shrinking to size that time and reflection have wrought in both hopes and fears for space defense, and he may count on having a skeptical Congress on "his" side. He would deal directly with the residual treaty by a new mutual affirmation of the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty and by consultations on testing.

The problem with sea-launched cruise missiles is how to tell the tactical and conventional ones that the U.S. Navy insists on from the strategic and nuclear ones that stand to be controlled. Verification does not get easier when it is diverted to side talks outside the treaty, but the move does perhaps simplify a prospective treaty's Senate passage. It sounds odd for Mr. Gorbachev to be helping Mr. Bush over the latter's political hurdles, but the benefits that may result would accrue to them both.

CHILD CARE PROVISIONS IN RECONCILIATION

HON. MIKE SYNAR

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, today I voted for the Education and Labor and Ways and Means Committees' child care provisions in the reconciliation package and opposed both substitute amendments, the first offered by Congressman EDWARDS and the second by Congressmen STENHOLM and SHAW.

Only the reconciliation provisions will increase both the supply and affordability of quality child care. The provisions build on proven programs, adding over $400 million to Head Start and expanding both before and after school day-care programs. They also will strengthen current State efforts to provide child care services for infants, toddlers, and young children. The reconciliation bill sets up quality guidelines for child care providers while leaving ultimate decision on setting up requirements up to the States.

Neither of the substitute amendments have provisions comparable to the Education and Labor Committee's contribution to the reconciliation package. While the Stenholm-Shaw amendment purports to expand Head Start, it actually adds no new money to the program above the $300 million already approved by the House earlier this year. Both substitutes ignore the importance of improving health and safety in child care centers and ensuring parental access to these centers.

It's also important to note that the amendment offered by Congressmen STENHOLM and SHAW will result in the counting of the earned income tax credit [EITC] as income when determining eligibility for various forms of assistance. The loss of AFDC eligibility, for example, may result in the loss of Medicaid benefits, and the increased income level will lead in an increase in rent for assisted housing. The Stenholm substitute may result in trading these benefits for child care benefits.

Many of us are concerned about the bill's effect on church-based child care. I was happy to hear that the Democratic leadership is committed to ensure in conference that State vouchers will be allowed to go to church-based child care under the final bill. This should be done in a manner which does not result in entangling child care in the courts, the likely result if the Stenholm amendment has passed.

I support the child care provisions in the reconciliation package because they are our only chance for a comprehensive approach to providing quality child care nationwide. Such an approach is truly needed today, as our children are being born into a world dominated by an increasingly competitive international economy. They will need to be better educated at an earlier age, and their parents will be forced to spend even more time at work. The provisions in the reconciliation bill are a reaction to these changes, and show Americans that we in Congress are indeed ready to pay more attention to their children's needs.

ADMISSION OF PHILO T. FARNSWORTH STATUE TO STATUARY HALL ON BEHALF OF THE PEOPLE OF UTAH

HON. WAYNE OWENS

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. OWENS of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor today to introduce legislation that would authorize the placement of a second statue for the State of Utah in the Capitol's National Statuary Hall, The people of the State of Utah have chosen Philo T. Farnsworth, the father of television, as our distinguished representative to stand next to Brigham Young in Statuary Hall.

As Utahns, I believe we share a great deal of pride in our pioneer heritage and our people. Dr. Farnsworth represents that Utah pioneer spirit. He is known to most of us as the inventor and father of television. However, his contributions extend much further. He developed the technology for sophisticated applications such as sonar and radar and even newborn infant incubators. He brought us closer to our universe through astronomers' telescopes, and delivered the live pictures of the first man on the Moon. His achievements and innovations have impacted each of our lives and influenced the way we experience our world. We wish to honor this truly remarkable inventor and bestow his statue as a permanent example of that enterprising Utah spirit.

I am proud he has been chosen to represent the people of Utah and encourage my colleagues in the House to support our efforts to present a statue on behalf of the people of Utah to the citizens of our Nation.

PANAMA'S TROUBLES UNABATED

HON. LAWRENCE COUGHLIN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I know I join many of my colleagues in the House in expressing great disappointment over the fact that the window of opportunity that was created by the coup attempt in Panama was just a little too small, and open not quite long enough, to enable the United States to assist Panamanians in ousting Gen. Manuel Noriega.

According to Defense Secretary Richard Cheney and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Colin Powell, we received information on Sunday night that a coup against Noriega might occur on Monday. These reports were treated cautiously, however; the reported leader of the coup, Maj. Moises Giroldi, was suspect because he commanded Noriega's security battalion and because he was instrumental in putting down an anti-Noriega coup only last year. As the hours passed on Monday without anything happening, doubts grew. Then U.S. officials received a report that the coup was postponed to Tuesday.

Indeed, on Tuesday it appeared that a coup was in fact taking place. United States forces attached to the Southern Command [Southcom] heard shots being fired in and around Panama's military headquarters, lasting about 2 hours.

Though tips provided to United States officials about the coup were vague, it soon became evident that units of the Panama Defense Forces [PDF] which were allegedly to defect to the rebels' side were in fact not defecting.

In the end, the coup was so short-lived that the United States had little opportunity to take action. The coup leaders never established a perimeter around PDF headquarters that would have enabled the United States to extract Noriega, or to assist at acceptable risk to American lives. In fact, the information available indicates that the coup leaders never offered to deliver Noriega to the United States. Instead, they sought his retirement from his post, but wanted him to remain in Panama.

This is the most regrettable aspect of this episode. Noriega is an indicted drug offender and a corrupt dictator who has frustrated hope for democracy in Panama. I would like nothing more than to see him ousted from power and delivered to the United States to stand trial on his drug charges.

I hope that, if nothing else, this latest affair will persuade our Latin American allies, who in too many cases have been reticent to pressure Noriega, that only strong sanctions and other measures against Noriega will restore democracy to Panama.

THE NEED FOR A MARKET ECONOMY HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

HON. JOHN J. DUNCAN, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, many people are beginning to realize that the main cause of skyrocketing medical costs is too much government involvement in the health field.

Some experts have even said that the United States presently has one of the most regulated health care systems in the world.

Far too much of the medical dollar today is going for administrative, bureaucratic costs—some estimates are as high as 45 to 50 percent—and not for actual care of patients.

I would like to submit for the RECORD two recent thought-provoking articles, which I commend to my colleagues' attention.

If we are ever going to reduce medical costs in this country, we need to consider new and innovative approaches.

We certainly do not need more government control or a totally nationalized system that will only and inevitably lead to long waits for many types of medical care, ever-increasing costs to the taxpayer, and even a black market health system.

LET CONSUMERS PULL THE HEALTH-CARE PURSE STRINGS

(By Clark S. Judge)

Some issues get rolling and there's no stopping them. A case in point is national health insurance, growing in popularity in policy circles even as the nation's elderly cry for relief from the catastrophic burden of federal catastrophic care insurance.

Now, in New York, the Cuomo team has barged into the act. David Axelrod, the governor's chief health official, has proposed a program requiring businesses to buy health insurance for their employees or contribute to a state fund for the uninsured. The state would pay all medical bills—hospitals, doctors, everything—and in turn bill the patient's private insurer or the state fund.

The idea is to extend coverage to the 2.5 million uninsured New Yorkers while giving state government the monopoly buying power to force costs down. The problem is that the proposal takes to the logical extreme all the trends that have made for trouble in our health-care system: more central funding, more central control.

Until recently, conservatives didn't figure in the health-care financed debate, except as no-men. But over the summer a flagship think tank of the right, the Heritage Foundation, startled the nation's capital by putting forward its own plan for reform of our national health system.

Heritage noted that the tax code has virtually shut market forces out of U.S. health care. More than anything else, its study observed, this is why the system is in trouble. Here's how it works:

Most of us consider company-paid health-insurance premiums as extra income, yet they don't count as income for taxes. In essence, we receive tax credits if our employers foot the bill. But if we pay for a policy or for a health service directly, there's no tax break. We pay in after-tax dollars. Not surprisingly, employers provide comprehensive health insurance for nearly two-thirds of the nation.

As a result, the health-care system has turned into a one-industry example of national industrial policy. It is run by a consortium of business, labor and government with the consumer out of the picture.

In a market economy, the consumer balances what he pays with what he gets. But this run-from-above health-care economy is more like a command economy. And as in command economies, the cost of service is virtually invisible to the consumer. Freed from consumer supervision, the incentives for producers all point to more production at greater expense. The bumbling giants of business, labor and government cannot substitute for the supple marketplace. As with command economies around the world, the balance between cost and service has been lost.

Stuart Butler and Edmund Haislmaier, the editors of the Heritage study, believe that the U.S. health-care system must either come under more centralized control or adopt real market controls. At the moment, Washington is toying with a rigid system of fees for specialties and procedures. Dr. Axelrod's proposal would let New York state impose its own system. Mr. Butler notes that this "relative value system," as it is called in Washington, is just the labor theory of value—anchor of the economics in collapse most places east of the Iron Curtain but apparently resurgent on this side of the Atlantic.

The Heritage answer? Reverse the tax incentives. Give us tax credits when we purchase health insurance and health service ourselves; count as taxable income any purchase through our companies. As employers shifted dollars out of premium payments and into paychecks, our real after-tax incomes wouldn't change. But we, not our companies, would soon be in control of our health purchases. Messrs. Butler and Haislmaier would require us to buy catastrophic coverage. (If we are poor, they would extend government-provided coverage to us.) How we pay for other services—directly or through insurance—would be our choice.

As Rand Corp. found in studies certain to figure prominently in the debate, when people pay a fee for health services (emergency rooms were Rand's focus), use becomes wiser and more sparing. Health improves even as visits to the hospital drop off. Messrs. Butler and Haislmaier believe that this is just what will happen when ordinary people take a long, hard look at insurance premiums and other health costs and ask, "Am I getting my money's worth?" A true market in health services will spring to life, putting a brake on health-care inflation and creating an environment in which it will be easier for government and business to insure those not now insured .

The Heritage team is not alone in its general conclusions. Harvard Business School Prof. Regina Herzlinger, for example, has developed a similar plan, calling for tax deductions rather than credits. She would have the money raised through taxing the newly counted income go to pay for health coverage for the poor.

Whatever the details, outside of Washington and New York, who can doubt any more that market economics is superior to command economics? And who wouldn't agree that our health-care system doesn't need another dose of the portion that has already put it under the weather? It needs real medicine for a real cure.

THE COST OF CHAOS

Watching Congress wrestle with Medicare's catastrophic insurance program—created only a year ago—is a depressing reminder of why our health-care system is out of control. Americans want more health care without paying for it. There's a dreamlike quality to our thinking and expectations. The result is a chaotic health system which, although it still gives good care to most Americans, will continue to breed rising public confusion, frustration and discontent.

Chaotic? You can't describe our system, let alone control it. It's not socialized medicine. It's not private medicine. We want the security of welfare without the invasiveness of government control. Our health-care system is a jumble of groups (doctors, hospitals, government agencies, health-maintenance organizations, private insurers) working under a bewildering array of regulations and pursuing different objectives. No one is in charge. Power is fragmented. But there's a method to this madness. It's intended to mask basic contradictions in public attitude about health care.

We know what we want from our health-care system. Everyone generally agrees that it should:

1. Provide good care regardless of ability to pay. Except for the wealthy, no one can afford the costs of a serious illness.

2. Allow free choice. We want to pick our doctors, while doctors want to practice as they see fit. Both doctors and patients want the best available technology.

3. Keep costs down. We don't want to be impoverished by skyrocketing health costs.

The trouble is that no health system can meet all these worthy goals. If people can get all the good care they want, they will want more and more. Patients and doctors will encounter no limits. Someone else (insurers, the government) will always pay. But controlling costs by defining who gets coverage or which treatments qualify inevitably limits patients' access and doctors' autonomy. We are simply unwilling to face up to the contradictions.

Catastrophic health insurance is a good case in point. In 1988 Congress expanded Medicare's coverage of hospital stays, nursing-home care and nonhospital drug costs. To pay for the plan—originally estimated to cost $31 billion through 1993—Congress imposed new taxes on the elderly. All 33 million Medicare recipients pay an extra flat fee, rising to $122 a year in 1993. In addition, up to half the wealthiest Medicare beneficiaries pay a new surtax. By 1993, it would reach a maximum of $2,100 for a couple (at an estimated $65,000 to $75,000 of income) and $1,050 for an individual (at about $40,000 to $45,000 of income).

Well, all hell broke loose. Legions of elderly are now clamoring that Congress end the surtax—that is, tax someone else—or scrap the program. Regardless of what happens, the remarkable thing about the controversy is its visibility. Choices are being discussed. Is the coverage worth the cost? To whom? Congressmen and senators are shell-shocked. They're uncomfortable because the debate is embarrassingly open and is so uncharacteristic of the obscurity normally enveloping health-care issues.

Denying contradictions: Obscurity and complexity are defense mechanisms. No one wants to make basic choices or be seen making them. We resolve contradictions by denying them. Every group pursues its own goals. Doctors and hospitals try to maximize their independence and profits. Patients (usually as members of a group) try to maximize their insurance, public or private, at someone else's expense. Drug companies and equipment manufacturers promote new technologies. Government wants all good things, but the federal government wants the states to pay and vice versa. The resulting system baffles experts—costs are routinely underestimated—and increasingly fails to meet any of our basic goals.

Since 1980, employer-paid insurance costs have risen nearly three times faster than wages. Total health spending now exceeds 11 percent of the gross national product, up from 9 percent in 1980. Adequate access to good care is inadequate. An estimated 31 million Americans lack any health insurance. Patients' and doctors' freedom is increasingly checked by government and private cost-containment programs. Paperwork is a big burden. Doctors are besieged by "armies of claims clerks, administrators, auditors, form processors, peer reviewers, functionaries and technocrats of every description," one doctor wrote recently in The New England Journal of Medicine.

In theory, it's possible to improve the system. There's waste: excessive overhead costs; unneeded tests and operations. We could adopt a Canadian-like system of government insurance with stringent cost controls on doctors and hospitals. Or we could make patients and doctors more cost-conscious by limiting insurance to cover only serious illness and not normal medical expenses (say, 5 percent of income). One way to do that would be to restrict the tax deductibility of employer-paid insurance.

But such sweeping approaches collide with public preferences. People want more, not less, insurance. Even if tough cost controls ended all waste, there remains a more basic source of rising health spending: expensive new medical technologies. Lower spending in Canada and other countries (usually 6 to 9 percent of GNP) partly reflects limits on technology. The journal Health Affairs reports that six new technologies are generally two to seven times more available in the United States than in Canada or West Germany. Whether we have too much or they have too little is unclear. But rationing Americans' access to new technologies through long waits would provoke loud protests.

Just about every group involved with the health-care system is increasingly dissatisfied, though for different reasons. Gaps in coverage are glaring. Rising insurance costs (even if employer-paid) depress workers' spendable earnings through either lower wage increases or higher taxes. So, there will be more efforts to control costs and improve access. They will be complex and, given political realities, inconsistent because they will have to accommodate contradictory public pressures. No grand solution is in sight. How could there be? Our unrealistic expectations have created an insolvable problem.

TRIBUTE TO SANTA BARBARA BEAUTIFUL

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, today I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the members of Santa Barbara Beautiful as they celebrate their 25th anniversary of service to the community of greater Santa Barbara this Sunday, October 8.

Santa Barbara Beautiful was founded on September 15, 1965 for the purpose of working closely with and serving as a complement to the current and future mayors and city councils to stimulate community interest and action toward the enhancement of Santa Barbara's beauty.

Santa Barbara Beautiful annually awards certificates of merit to properties, nominated by the community, for their enhancement of Santa Barbara's environment. In addition, they have established a monthly award program intended to recognize the efforts of individual homeowners who have done their own landscaping and maintenance, thus enhancing their neighborhood and community.

On August 11, 1966, Santa Barbara Beautiful proposed and later established a street tree program for city parkways and has, to date, planted over 5,000 trees. In fact, the city of Santa Barbara has been designated a Tree City U.S.A. by the National Arbor Day Foundation in each of the past 9 years.

One of the organization's more interesting contributions to the city was its instrumental role in naming the Hibiscus as the official city flower.

Santa Barbara Beautiful also works with the schools and community to sponsor beautification projects such as litter cleanup programs and the cleaning, weeding, and replanting of unsightly areas.

IN SUPPORT OF THE X-30 NATIONAL AEROSPACE PLANE PROGRAM

HON. BEN GARRIDO BLAZ

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BLAZ. Mr. Speaker, with so many defense programs competing for limited funding, it is often difficult to pick one program over another to recommend for consideration. For that reason, I have resorted to using certain yardsticks by which to judge a program. One of those yardsticks is what the program's potential is for the future—in this case, of the Nation's aviation.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, the United States X-30 National Aerospace Plane Program is one that can insure the Nation's continuing preeminence in global aerospace. Unfortunately, this program is not receiving the support that it deserves if it is to continue. Fortunately, on the other hand, the House of Representatives does and manifests its support by raising the 1990 NASP budget from $127 to $285 million.

The October 2, 1989 issue of Aviation Week and Space Technology carried an article entitled "Preserve the X-30 NASP", which I recommend to my colleagues. I urge review of this fine piece and support of the program which has so much promise and potential for the future of aviation.

For the benefit of my colleagues, I am inserting the Aviation Week's article in the RECORD.

PRESERVE THE X-30 NASP

The U.S.'s X-30 National Aero-Space Plane program faces a critical funding decision before a House/Senate conference committee this week, and it appears that future prospects for this manned, hypersonic, single-state-to-orbit vehicle are gloomy at best.

The Senate Appropriations defense subcommittee wants to kill it. The Subcommittee recently zeroed the 1990 Defense Department/NASA X-30 budget, and told the U.S. industry to go to Europe or Japan, hat-in-hand, for funds.

Secretary of the Air Force Donald Rice also opposes it. He and his former colleagues at Rand Corp have been steadfast, implacable opponents of the program.

NASA Administrator Richard Truly does not want it, at least not badly enough to fight for X-30 funding. The NASP would be a drain on resources he desperately wants to support NASA's Freedom space station program.

Apparently President Bush, Vice President Quayle and the Space Council do not want the NASP either. Despite their previously announced "strong support," none has voiced a concern that the program could be starved of funds and effectively canceled this week.

Who supports the X-30? We do, for one, and we strongly endorse continued funding for it. The industry team that has committed treasure and labor to the project continues to push for NASP, as does the House of Representatives, which raised the Defense Department's 1990 NASP budget to $285 million from the $127 million proposed by the Space Council. The support is commenmdable.

The U.S. taxpayers also should support it, since the NASP decision can affect the U.S.'s future preeminence in global aerospace. NASP airframe and propulsion needs are driving development of high-strength, high temperature, low-weight aerospace materials in the U.S. NASP's requirement to model hypersonic airflows and combustion processes is pacing computational fluid dynamics codes and development of advanced supercomputers.

Despite Rice's protestations, these technologies are within reach and their development can be accelerated with sufficient funding. The NASP is the right program for this and now is the right time to do it.

When the conference committee meets this week it must set the Defense Department's 1990 NASP contribution at $285 million and NASA's at $98 million—as a minimum. If Congress doesn't, the NASP program will die.

If this happens, engineers now working on NASP will have to explain to their children and grandchildren how a handful of shortsighted men and women squandered their nation's aviation legacy because they lacked the vision, wisdom and fortitude to continue the United State's drive to explore the unknown.

DO SOMETHING ABOUT TERRORISM

HON. JOE BARTON

OF TEXAS

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the most recent act of terrorism we have witnessed is the bombing of a French DC-10 airliner which killed a constituent of mine, Mr. Pat Wayne Huff of Franklin, TX. The bomb exploded just 23 minutes into the flight to Paris, France, blasting the plane apart over Africa and killing 171 people, Mr. Huff is survived by his wife, Ermine, two children, Mandy and Jerrod, and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jim Huff, also of Franklin, TX. I extend my sincere sympathy to his family and friends.

Mr. Huff worked for Parker Drilling Co. of Tulsa, OK, and had been in Chad for several months. He was returning to be with his family. The senseless act of terrorism has now affected innocent people in the Sixth Congressional District of Texas. If the U.S. does not demonstrate to these killers that we will not tolerate such vicious acts, then terrorists will continue to perceive and exploit the weaknesses in our position. Terrorism will only be deterred when the United States exhibits the will to do so.

I have introduced legislation, H.R. 1515, the Anti-Terrorism Act of 1989, which would widen the range of possible sanctions against nations that support terrorism. I was surprised and disturbed to discover that some of these governments, such as Iran, Libya, and Syria, which are currently under certain product-specific administrative trade sanctions, still enjoy most favored nation status with the United States. We cannot allow our citizens abroad like Pat Huff, to be in constant danger from terrorism.

I realize that this legislation will not end all terrorism and its threat, but it will utilize the American market power as a bargaining tool to thwart terrorist attacks against innocent Americans. Special trading preferences should be reserved for our friends and allies, not terrorist nations.

The United States must not blatantly continue to support terrorist countries. There must be a penalty for being an American enemy. Striking these countries below the economic belt is at least one step America can and should take as an antiterrorist policy, not to mention incorporate in American international trading policy.

INTRODUCTION OF THE AIDS HOUSING OPPORTUNITIES ACT

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, today I am proud to join with my distinguished colleagues, Representatives MCDERMOTT and SCHUMER, in introducing the AIDS Housing Opportunities Act. This bill would authorize $290 million in 1990 and 1991 for programs to prevent homelessness and provide short-term and permanent housing and services for people with AIDS.

There are more than 50,000 persons living with an AIDS diagnosis in the United States and an estimated over 1½ million people infected with the AIDS virus. People with AIDS fight a daily battle for survival. They are faced with uncertainty about the provision of basic medical services, about the effectiveness of possible treatments and about how they will pay for their basic needs. The burden of day-to-day life for people with AIDS is great enough without the added fear of homelessness. The AIDS Housing Opportunities Act will reduce that uncertainty by ensuring that safe housing for people with AIDS is available.

A 43-city survey in 1988 estimated that there are roughly 20,000 homeless people with AIDS. The daily problems of homelessness are magnified for these people. It is impossible to fight a deadly disease and at the same time, fight the streets. These people cannot wait for housing to become available. Each day on the streets or living with the fear of imminent homelessness takes a direct and immediate toll on the health of a person with AIDS.

The AIDS Housing Opportunities Act is a comprehensive bill designed to address the special housing needs of people with AIDS and related illnesses at several levels. It would authorize programs to prevent homelessness; it would provide short-term housing with supportive services for homeless people with AIDS; and, it would provide permanent housing. These programs would assist in enhancing the quality of life of persons with AIDS and related diseases and at the same time, provide residential alternatives that reduce the cost of institutional care, thus lessening the cost burden of this tragic disease.

The legislation would expand access to independent living opportunities and provide new residential alternatives for individuals incapable of fully independent living, but not in need of hospital care. In the city of San Francisco, we have several successful models for housing programs for people with AIDS, including the Peter Claver House, run by Catholic Charities, and Shanti housing, run by the Shanti project. These projects do an excellent job with limited resources, but they cannot keep up with the growing need.

It costs roughly $850 a day for inpatient care for one AIDS patient in San Francisco. Peter Claver House costs approximately $40 per day per person. Shanti costs approximately $30 per day. Providing housing resources will clearly reduce the immediate costs of living for people with AIDS. It will also reduce long-term costs as these individuals will say healthier and will be able to continue to participate as active members of their communities.

The final report of the Presidential Commission on the Human Immunodeficiency Virus Epidemic included amongst its more than 600 recommendations the need for the Department of Housing and Urban Development [HUD] to become more involved in meeting the housing needs of people with AIDS. The AIDS Housing Opportunities Act would take specific steps toward meeting that goal. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this important bill.

COLUMBUS DAY: A NATIONAL CELEBRATION

HON. LOUISE M. SLAUGHTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, the day that bears the name of Christopher Columbus has become a national celebration of our imminent roots. Hundreds of thousands of Italian immigrants voyaged to our great shores for the opportunity to achieve their full potential. Columbus Day is a time to pay tribute to that courageous spirit.

I am proud to say that I recently cosponsored House Joint Resolution 374, a joint resolution proclaiming Christopher Columbus to be an honorary citizen of the United States, and House Joint Resolution 392, the Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month resolution. Supported by a strong value system and a commitment to hard work, Italian immigrants in particular have used their special talents to make their vision of a better life a reality. America continues to benefit from their many political, economic, and cultural contributions.

Italian-American organizations throughout the United States have provided a better understanding of the past. The Italian-American Businessmen's Association, Italian-American War Veterans, and Italian Civic League are just a few of the organizations in my district that have been sharing their heritage and history with others for years.

So, Mr. Speaker, as we prepare to celebrate the 500th anniversary of Columbus' voyage to America in 1992, we, as a nation, must also renew the effort to develop a keener appreciation for the cultural treasures all our immigrants have bestowed upon us. Columbus Day offers a tremendous opportunity to demonstrate our profound gratitude not only for the eternal gifts of Italian-Americans, but those of all our immigrants as well.

A JOB FOR EUROPEAN NEIGHBORS

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, Hungary and Poland currently are endeavoring to escape from the economic chaos brought on by over 40 years of Socialist mismanagement. To accomplish this lofty objective, however, assistance from the West is necessary. However, aid must not be delivered in a fashion that undermines the very enterprises that we are trying to sustain. For example, food aid to Poland is necessary to prevent starvation, but Western generosity should not undermine prices and force Polish farmers out of business.

Careful planning is required at every level if the Western aid is to achieve its desired objective. With American agreement and encouragement the European Commission [EC] has taken the lead in organizing the Western effort. The EC technical experts have only recently returned from an exhaustive review of Polish development requirements. The result is to be a $660 million assistance package that will focus on agricultural production and distribution, business management education, and environmental clean-up.

To its credit, the Bush administration has hailed the EC's willingness to step forward. The United States has made it clear that it will participate—$200 million requested by the administration—but aid to Poland and Hungary should be seen primarily as a European-led initiative.

The European Commission's willingness to come to the aid of its Eastern neighbors should be hailed as an entirely appropriate position. The EC's efforts are designed to heal old wounds, to encourage democratization and liberalizations, and to reunite a Europe that has been divided for decades.

Mr. Speaker, this Member would commend to his colleagues a September 29, 1989, editorial in the Omaha World-Herald entitled "A Job for European Neighbors." As the editorial notes. "The possibility exists that the collapse of the Marxist order will leave behind the seeds of a new order in Europe—one that is held together not by the blood-and-iron policies of the past but by friendship and economic cooperation." The leadership of the EC is helping to make this restructured European order a reality.

It is fitting that the European Economic Community's executive commission has proposed a greater role for Western Europe in providing aid for Poland and Hungary. The proposal calls on 24 Western industrial democracies to provide $660 million to the two eastern bloc nations that are looking for a post-communist solution to their economic difficulties.

The 24-nation package would lift some of the burden of expectations that has fallen on the United States since President Bush's visit to Eastern Europe in July. The Bush administration has asked Congress for more than $200 million in emergency food aid and other assistance to the two nations.

The European-sponsored $660 million aid package would include assistance with agricultural productivity, pollution abatement and management training that the sponsors hope will help Poland and Hungary break free of the unproductive central controls of Communist-style economic life.

The world's democracies, particularly those of Europe, should be at the head of the line in welcoming into their fold those countries that are trying to restore democratic traditions after decades of Marxist repression. Both Poland and Hungary have reached a delicate point in their political and social transformations. The Soviet Union has neither economic nor moral resources to lure them back. A helping hand from the West could be instrumental.

If Poland and Hungary led the way with an economic recovery based on the principles of democracy and free enterprise, the Soviet Union and other Eastern European countries would have more incentive to follow.

A united, peaceful Europe has been an elusive dream. Now the dream is becoming less elusive. The possibility exists that the collapse of the Marxist order will leave behind the seeds of a new order in Europe—one that is held together not by the blood-and-iron policies of the past but by friendship and economic cooperation.

KUDOS FOR WILMER-HUTCHINS

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, today the House voted in favor of the Early Childhood Development and Education Act which I have cosponsored. That act, which is part of the budget reconciliation package, is comprehensive child care legislation that includes Federal investments in preschool education.

Consequently, I call attention to a program currently operating in my district under the direction of Mr. Charles Matthews, superintendent of the Wilmer-Hutchins Independent School District. Mr. Matthews was recently honored as the region 10 Administrator of the Year by the Texas Association of School Boards and Texas Association of School Administrators.

I hope the following editorial from the Dallas Times Herald will encourage others to find innovative and successful ways to teach our children during their most formative years.

[From the Dallas (TX) Times Herald, Oct. 2, 1989]

KUDOS FOR WILMER-HUTCHINS

In the Wilmer-Hutchins school district, new programs are being used to make school a place where children make discoveries and find success. One program in particular, a preschool program for 3-year-olds, already is a model for similar programs across the state, even though the program has been in place only two years at Wilmer-Hutchins.

Open to any 3-year-old in the district, the program provides children with structure, not pressure. It's a five-day, seven-hour curriculum that exposes children to reading and writing without pushing them.

For students in the district's regular curriculum, there are Saturday classes for any student who falls behind in any three-week reporting period. There also are special tutoring programs available during the regular school day.

All the programs and all the efforts of the staff are aimed at sending kids home every day feeling successful. The notion is that kids who arrive at the end of the school day feeling they have mastered something that day will keep coming back the next day, hungry for more of school, more of knowledge, more of life. For that, the district makes an extra and heartfelt effort.

Wilmer-Hutchins is not a rich district. The 3-year-old and Saturday programs are possible, in part, because district supervisory personnel run them on a volunteer basis and because teachers are willing to staff them at nominal wage. These exciting new ventures at Wilmer-Hutchins have come about under the administration of Superintendent Charles Matthews.

Mr. Matthews was honored this weekend in San Antonio where the Texas Association of School Boards and Texas Association of School Administrators named him at their joint annual convention as the Region 10 Administrator of the Year. The award is a fitting tribute to a fine program and a fine administrator, but it falls beyond Mr. Matthews' shoulders alone. It's a fitting tribute to an entire school district and the finest goal to which any of us can aspire—making the world bigger and better for children.

TRIBUTE TO TONY COELHO

HON. ANDREW JACOBS, JR.

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, the following story from the Washington Post of October 2, belongs in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Tony Coelho is an extraordinarily gifted human being whose gifts have only been enhanced by adversity.

He quite clearly subscribed to and lives day by day by the verity that "to whom much is given much is expected."

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 2, 1989]

PERSONALITIES

By Chuck Conconi

Speculation is that Tony Coelho, the former House majority whip who's being honored tomorrow at a black-tie dinner, is about to announce he will become a managing director with Wertheim Schroder & Co., a New York investment banking firm. Unlike some other former members of Congress, Coelho wants to avoid any future employment that would have him using Capitol Hill connections. From the numerous business and university positions Coelho has been offered, it seems likely that he will also establish lecturing positions at UCLA and Georgetown University.

Tomorrow's dinner at the Capitol Hill Hyatt Regency, emceed by CBS anchor Dan Rather, honors Coelho's work on behalf of those with epilepsy and is developing into a testimonial for the highly respected Coelho. It is sponsored by the leadership of the Senate and the House and is expected to bring out such colleagues as House Speaker Tom Foley and Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell. Among the scheduled speakers one might not expect to see at a dinner honoring a California liberal Democrat are House Minority Whip Newt Gingrich and Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole. Coelho, whose epilepsy destroyed a youthful ambition to become a Catholic priest, has over the years raised $3 million through his Coelho Fund for the Epilepsy Foundation and the UCLA School of Medicine. Tomorrow's dinner will serve as the first public recognition of support since the resignation of the 47-year-old former congressman, who many said would one day become speaker before he resigned in May.

ENCOURAGING SAVING TO MEET LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE NEEDS

HON. HANK BROWN

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, today, many older Americans cite long-term care as the most important health care need facing seniors.

Medicare, the Federal health insurance program for the elderly and disabled does not address long-term care needs. It focuses primarily on acute health care. Medicare coverage of nursing home care, for example, is limited to short stays in certain kinds of nursing homes. Neither it nor the ill-conceived Medicare catastrophic program addresses the needs of chronically ill individuals who require not only medical attention, but also daily help in the home, or in a community or institutional setting, with activities such as eating, bathing, and dressing.

Only one public program, Medicaid, the Federal-State health program for the poor, covers long-term stays in nursing homes. It does so, however, only for those persons who meet strict income and asset rules.

About half of long-term care costs are paid for privately. Nearly all, 97 percent, of private spending is paid directly by consumers out-of-pocket. Paying for long-term care services, especially nursing home care, which averages about $25,000 annually, can represent a catastrophic expenditure that impoverishes many elderly persons and their families.

Long-term care is expected to become more pressing in years to come as the number of elderly in our population grows. There is no single solution to meet the growing need for long-term care. One simple and immediate action the Government can take is to encourage personal saving to finance health care costs.

Today, I have introduced legislation to allow individuals 59½ years of age or older to exclude from annual gross income up to $2,000 withdrawn from an individual retirement account to pay for premiums for long-term health care insurance.

Such a tax incentive will encourage saving to meet health care needs, make accessible affordable, comprehensive long-term care, and preserve personal freedom of choice regarding participation and coverage.

A summary of my bill follows:

SUMMARY OF BILL

IRA EXCLUSION FOR LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE INSURANCE

Allows individuals 59½ or older to exclude from annual gross income up to $2,000 ($1,000 in the case of a separate return filed by a married individual) withdrawn from an Individual Retirement Account to pay premiums for long-term health care insurance.

The distribution must be used during the year to pay premiums for any qualified long-term health care insurance policy for the benefit of the payee, distributee, or the spouse of the payee or distributee if the spouse is age 59½ or older on or before the date of the distribution.

COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT

The dollar amount eligible to be withdrawn from the IRA shall be adjusted annually to take into account changes in the medical component of the Consumer Price Index.

DEFINITIONS

"Long-term health care insurance" means an insurance contract through which long-term care benefits are provided and the renewal of the contract is guaranteed.

"Long-term health care" means providing necessary diagnostic, preventive, therepeutic, and rehabilitative services, or maintenance, or personal care services, required by a chronically ill individual in a facility by a qualified provider.

It also means an individual's home if a licensed physician certifies that without home care the individual would have to be cared for in an institution. A home shall be treated as a "qualified facility" to the extent the cost of services is not greater than the cost of similar services in other qualified facilities.

"Chronically ill individual" means an individual certified by a licensed physician as requiring assistance with eating, toileting, mobility, bathing, or dressing.

"Qualified provider" means a medical practitioner licensed under state law, registered nurse, qualified therapist, trained home health aide employed by a licensed home health agency, or trained home health aide licensed under state law, but does not include a relative or other person who ordinarily resides in the home.

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, it gives me special pleasure to rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding citizen of our country, Mr. William P. Clark, Jr. He is being honored by the Villanova Board of Trustees for all that he has done for the Villanova Preparatory School on Saturday, October 14, at a groundbreaking ceremony and celebration for the new William P. Clark, Jr., Gymnasium.

Mr. Clark entered public service in 1967 as cabinet secretary to Gov. Ronald Reagan, and as a member of the Governor's Task Force on Governmental Reorganization. The following year he was appointed executive secretary and chief of staff by Governor Reagan.

In 1969, Mr. Clark was apppointed judge of the California Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County. Two years later he was appointed an associate justice, California Court of Appeals in Los Angeles. In 1973, Mr. Clark was named by Governor Reagan as an associate justice of the California Supreme Court in San Francisco, an office he held until called to Washington, DC, early in 1981.

During President Reagan's term in office, Mr. Clark served as Deputy Secretary of the Department of State, advisor to the President for national security, and Secretary of the Interior.

Following completion of 18 years of full-time public service, Mr. Clark was asked by President Ronald Reagan to serve as Chairman of the Task Group on Nuclear Weapons Program Management, as Presidential emissary to the chairmen of the Navajo and Hopi Indian Tribes, as a member of the Commission on Defense Management—Packard Commission, as a member of the Defense Department's Commission on Integrated Long-Term Strategy, and as trustee of the Ronald Reagan Presidential Foundation and Library.

Mr. Clark became counsel to the law firm of Rogers & Wells in March 1985 and is currently chief executive officer of the Clark Co., a family held California corporation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in acclamation of William Clark, a distinguished community leader and an exemplary citizen.

MILITARY INSTALLATIONS—DRUG FREE ZONES

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing important legislation that will assist our Nation on the war that is ravaging our Nation and killing our children. Mr. Speaker, I am speaking of the war against drugs.

Today I am introducing legislation which will make our Nation's military installations "Drug Free Zones." This legislation will impose mandatory penalties for the distribution, manufacture, or possession of illegal drugs with the intent to distribute, on or within 1,000 feet of a military installation in the United States. This legislation also calls for tougher penalties and fines for those with prior drug sale convictions.

Mr. Speaker, we have already made our schools and playgrounds drug free zones. Now is the time for this great Nation to reclaim its Federal military installations and issue a message to those who would work to destroy them and the communities surrounding those facilities. That message is this: "If Drug Dealers are Caught on a Federal Military Facility, They Will be Severely Punished."

There are several reasons why I am introducing this legislation. First, we cannot permit the compromise of our Nation's defense to those who will knowingly weaken it by providing illegal drugs to our soldiers, sailors and airmen. Second, many of our facilities are the largest employer in the towns or counties in which they are located. Often the surrounding communities look to the base for leadership and support of local projects.

By passing this legislation, we will tell those communities to get tough on drug sellers, because Uncle Sam is tough on drug sellers. Furthermore, this bill will send a strong anti-drug message to other Government agencies and to private industry.

Finally, our constituents are looking for ways to remove drugs from our society and they look to their elected officials for help. In fact, it was the men and women of the Andrews Air Base NCO Preparatory School who came to me and said that enough was enough: make it tough to get drugs on military bases. Like these outstanding men and women who took the initiative to get personally involved in this war, we must also take the extra steps that are required to win the drug war.

I urge my colleagues to examine this bill and support its passage. This legislation will help to ensure that America's military bases, like its schools, will remain a place that drug dealers want to stay away from.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

(b) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall prescribe regulations to carry out subsection (a).

A STEP TOWARD RESOLVING THE NATIONAL CHILD CARE CRISIS

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, this Nation is facing a child care crisis that touches every American family with young children. Twenty-three percent of the Nation's families have children age 6 or younger. Right now, the average family uses more than three different types of child care every week, indicating the instability of today's typical child care program. Beginning in 1990, two-thirds of women with preschool children will be working. Approximately 25 percent of today's working mothers are the sole economic support for their children. The composition of the Nation's work force has changed—last year, 51.6 million women made up 45 percent of the total labor force.

The typical family of mom staying home with the kids while dad goes off to work each day has changed. Many of today's families are predominantly single-parent households in which the sole parent works or double-parent households in which both parents work. It is a tragedy that the children of this country are made to suffer due to a lack of national quality child care programs.

I rise in support of the child care proposal in the House reconciliation bill. This proposal builds on expanding efforts already underway at both the Federal and State level to assist poor and low-income families in paying for child care: 25 percent of the funds are reserved to assist existing Head Start programs—expanding the program to full-day, year-round services for children. Twenty-five percent of the funds are reserved for school based early childhood programs, as well as for before- and after-school child care. Thirty-five percent of the funds are reserved to strengthen current State programs for infants and young children by allowing parents the choice of neighborhood, community-based, or other child care centers.

There is also a tremendous need to improve the quality of the child care available. Providing quality child care is a major concern for many parents. The United States is one of few industrialized nations that lack child care standards that regulate child care programs throughout the country. Without any Federal standards, many parents, especially low-income parents are forced to leave their children in substandard, even dangerous situations each day. It is important that we, as legislators recognize and address this need for quality child care choices for children. This child care proposal addresses this need of improving the quality of child care available. Under title IV, 15 percent of the funds are designated to improve the system of enforcing standards that regulate the centers. Part of this initiative includes strengthening the ability of parents to monitor child care centers, encouraging more participation and feedback from parents. Title IV also helps States to implement referral systems, to improve child care workers' salaries and to fund training for providers. This provision also helps increase the pool of available child care options by helping states to start new community and neighborhood centers.

Studies indicate that quality child care programs ultimately pay for themselves. The need for business interaction is crucial, because it benefits both the employer and employee. Decent, safe day care ensure that our Nation's children grow to be stable, productive, and competitive individuals and early preschool day care makes an even greater positive impact on the child. The child care proposal in H.R. 3299 helps to expand the business community's important role in providing child care. Employees are more competitive and focused when their children are being cared for in safe, comfortable, child care facilities. Businesses benefit by attracting and keeping employees who will not spend work hours worrying about the quality and availability of day care. Nationwide, employers report that providing child care services employees results in lower absenteeism and turnover and higher productivity and morale. This provision creates a matching grant program to assist businesses in starting or improving child care facilities.

The child care proposal in the House of reconciliation bill best addresses the child care needs of the families of this country. It helps poor working parents by assisting them in the initial cost, and it helps low-income working parents through a tax credit. It also addresses the concerns of all parents in search of decent child care. This child care proposal is a necessity for the working parents of this country. It is a solid approach to a basic, growing need that is growing larger each day. Mothers with preschool-age children continue to enter the work force in great numbers. It provides the assurance that parents will finally have the quality, affordable child care they desperately need.

Inadequate child care is a precursor to illiteracy, teen student drop-out and drugs in our schools. Just last week, President Bush and the Nation's Governors set goals for our education system that recognized a fundamental truth: If a child does not arrive at school ready to learn, no amount of teaching is likely to overcome this deficiency. By ensuring that parents of all income levels have quality choices for their children from infancy to the teen years, we are ultimately beginning to address a host of later problems. The child care provisions in this bill build on existing child care programs, assuring parents a range of choices in child care, and offering direct assistance to help parents pay for care. I strongly support this comprehensive national child care proposal.

A TRIBUTE TO THE CENTINELA VALLEY UNION HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICT'S BOARD OF TRUSTEES AND THE SUPERINTENDENT, DR. McKINLEY M. NASH, FOR SUCCESSFULLY IMPLEMENTING THE JOBS FOR AMERICA'S GRADUATES PROGRAM

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the Centinela Valley Union High School District's Board of Trustees and the superintendent, Dr. McKinley M. Nash. These individuals are to be commended for implementing the Jobs for America's Graduates Program in the Centinela Valley Schools which is located in an urban multiethnic, multicultural setting in the State of California.

Jobs for America's Graduates is a national program which, for the past 9 years, has conducted highly successful research, demonstration, and national replication of the program. After serving more than 70,000 young people in more than 280 high schools in 14 States, there is conclusive evidence that the program accomplished its goals. This program has reduced youth employment by 40 percent among those youth most at risk who are still in school, and doubled the chances that a minority youth will get and keep a job, once he or she graduates. Moreover, the Jobs for America's Graduates Program increased earnings for at-risk youth by more than 20 percent—$1,000 in the first year after graduation—and by more than 50 percent—$2,250 for minority youth. These gains have been documented in several evaluation studies of the program. All the above, Mr. Speaker, has been accomplished at a cost well below half of the national average for comparable youth job training programs, while including a full 9-month followup with young people on the job.

Mr. Speaker, the Jobs for America's Graduates noted that the program's success has been based on the following key elements: A strategy of prevention, basing program activities in the public schools and focusing on at-risk youths; operating as a nonprofit corporation which is strictly accountable to the success of its goals; namely, to motivate, train, and place young people in employment, and to ensure that they get a raise or promotion after placement; a statewide mobilization effort, utilizing not only government and educational institutions, but also the business and private sectors to accept responsibility for the sustained success of the program through participation of the board of directors; a properly trained and motivated staff which becomes the lynchpin in building students' self-confidence, employability, and an ability to graduate and succeed on a job.

Mr. Speaker, because of these achievements and the personal dedication of the board members as well as Superintendent Nash, I am confident that you will join me in commending Dr. Nash and the Centinela Valley Union High School District's Board of Trustees for their successful implementation of the nationally known Jobs for America's Graduates Program, and offering currently as the Jobs for Centinela Graduates Program.

THE INTRODUCTION OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 257, PROTESTING THE EUROPEAN ACTION ON TV BROADCASTING

HON. SAM GIBBONS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I introduced House Resolution 257, to protest the adoption of a highly restrictive and discriminatory TV broadcasting directive by the European Community [EC]. On Monday of this week, the Council of Ministers of the EC approved this directive as part of its program to unify Europe by the end of 1992.

The problem is, the particulars of this TV broadcasting directive violate the letter and the spirit of our trade rules under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT], and erect a trade barrier against U.S. exports of films and other entertainment products. The EC directive contains a local content requirement that reserves a majority of the programming time for European works, and thus acts as an absolute barrier to U.S. programs.

This type of protectionism is a direct violation of the GATT. It is exactly the type of protectionism which many people feared would result from the EC–1992 movement, and I am greatly dismayed to see that the EC Council of Ministers is feeding those fears. I would like to see the unification of Europe, but only in a manner which removes trade barriers, not erects them.

The resolution I introduced, and which I invite all of my colleagues to join me in sponsoring, denounces the adoption of this discriminatory TV broadcasting directive, and strongly urges the President and the U.S. Trade Representative to take all appropriate and feasible action under their authority to protect and maintain U.S. access to the EC broadcasting market.

The text of the resolution is reprinted below. I believe it is imperative that we not let this action by the EC go unnoticed, and that we send a strong signal to the Europeans that we will not tolerate a Europe with barriers. I urge my colleagues to join me in sending this message.

H. RES. 257

Whereas the European Community (EC) Council of Ministers adopted on October 2, 1989, a broadcasting directive (entitled "Council Directive on the Coordination of Certain Provisions Laid Down by Law, Regulation or Administrative Action in Member States Concerning the Pursuit of Television Broadcasting Activities") that obliges member states of the EC to take steps to ensure that each broadcaster reserves a majority of programming time for European works; Such broadcasting directive contains a local content requirement, in the form of both a quota and a minimum floor, that infringes upon the ability of United States broadcasting, film, and related industries to market their goods in the EC;

Whereas such local content requirement violates the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), specifically Article I relating to most-favored-nation treatment and Article III relating to national treatment;

Whereas the adoption of this restrictive and discriminatory broadcasting directive is inconsistent with claims by EC officials that the program to achieve the economic integration of Europe by the end of 1992 is not a program of protectionism and will not deny market access to non-European entities;

Whereas section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974 requires the United States Trade Representative to take action when the Trade Representative determines that rights of the United States under any trade agreement are being denied, or an act, policy, or practice of a foreign country violates, or is inconsistent with, the provisions of, or otherwise denies benefits to the United States under, any trade agreement, or is unjustifiable and burdens or restricts United States commerce; and

Whereas such section 301 also authorizes the United States Trade Representative to take action in response to an act, policy, or practice of a foreign country that is unreasonable or discriminatory and burdens or restricts United States commerce: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) denounces the action taken October 2, 1989, by the EC Council of Ministers in adopting a broadcasting directive that is trade restrictive and in violation of the GATT;

(2) deplores the damage which will be inflicted on United States broadcasting, film, and related industries as a result of the implementation of the GATT-Wegal restrictions under the broadcasting directive;

(3) regrets the adverse consequences which the EC action will have on—

(A) the bilateral trade relationship between the United States and the EC, particularly with respect; to EC steps to achieve economic integration, and

(B) efforts to strengthen the multilateral trading system and achieve open and fair trade through the GATT Uruguay round of negotiations;

(4) strongly urges the President and the United States Trade Representative to take all appropriate and feasible action under its authority, including possible action under section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974, to protect and maintain United States access to the EC broadcasting market;

(5) requests the United States Trade Representative to consult regularly with the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives on the status of this dispute and any action which it is considering with respect to the dispute; and

(6) directs the clerk of the House to transmit a copy of this resolution to appropriate officials in the EC.

SPEECH BY CRAIG MILLER

HON. ANTHONY C. BEILENSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege 2 weeks ago of participating in the opening ceremonies of the Fifth Annual AIDS Walk Los Angeles, which was an extremely moving and impressive occasion.

The most thoughtful words were delivered by Mr. Craig Miller, the coproducer of AIDS Walk Los Angeles, and I wanted to share them with my colleagues in the House of Representatives.

The speech follows:

SPEECH BY CRAIG MILLER

For so many of us here today, this fifth anniversary of AIDS Walk Los Angeles is marked with a mixture of pride, sadness, and anger.

Pride in how we have helped build AIDS Project Los Angeles into such an able and compassionate source of support for people with AIDS.

Sadness in remembrance of all those we've lost over the last five years.

Anger in how alone our government has left us throughout so much of this struggle.

When we first gathered on this famous motion picture lot five years ago, our intention was to play a supporting role. Our intention was to support APLA and, at the same time, awaken our President to the urgency of this national health emergency.

But the actor/President wouldn't act. Instead of taking center stage—exerting leadership—and helping our country avoid the burgeoning epidemic, he gave in to his own personal biases and prejudices and shrank from any constructive role in this crisis. And he left the leading role to be played by people like all of us here today.

Well, we may not have intended to play the leading role, we may not have wanted to play the leading role, but when faced with the alternative of just sitting by and watching this disease spread unchecked, we acted as best we could. And we acted very well.

Our actions have made a profound difference. We have helped usher in a new, brighter era of greater hope and longer, better lives for people with AIDS. Time and time again our actions have prevented our state and our country from taking that dangerous road toward AIDS prejudice, unfounded fear, and the absurdity of quarantine. We have also used the power of our collective voice to make it uncomfortable and unacceptable for any responsible national leader to be as indifferent to the AIDS crisis as the actor/President was.

Now we have a new president. And he shows signs of being far more compassionate than his predecessor. So it's time once again to try to get our government to assume its rightful role—to play the leading role—that it should have been playing all along. We must seize this opportunity to help our new President focus on the things that really matter. We must help our new President understand that in this, the time of AIDS, human life has to be the top priority.

The American flag is a great symbol. And, yes, it deserves respect. But our flag derives its greatness not from the fabric of which it is made, but from the lives it represents. So when a flag becomes frail and falls, it can be created again. But as a million and a half of our people, infected with the AIDS virus, gradually become frail and fall, a part of the real fabric of our country is lost forever and can not ever be replaced.

We assemble here today to help our new President and all of our elected leaders muster as much enthusiasm and vigor for protecting our nation's health as they have for protecting our nation's symbols.

Because the spirit of America is desecrated every time prejudice and ignorance are allowed to hinder efforts to stop the spread of AIDS.

And American lives are desecrated every time the Food and Drug Administration takes years to look at promising new AIDS drugs when it should have taken months.

We must insist that President Bush make conquering a national priority. Nothing could be kinder. Nothing could be gentler. And nothing could be more patriotic.

For those of you who have been walking on this road with us for so many years now, I say keep walking, keep talking, keep challenging, and keep supporting AIDS Project Los Angeles. Your efforts really do make a difference. And here's hoping that a tenth annual AIDS Walk Los Angeles will not be necessary.

WITHOUT HONEST MONEY CITIZENS HAVE NO INCENTIVE TO SAVE

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, most economists agree that the root problem of our economy is the insufficiency of savings. Personal savings, as a percentage of disposable personal income in the United States, has declined from a high of 9½ percent in 1972 (the last year the dollar had an honest definition) to a low of 3¼ percent in 1987 (the year of the stock market crash). With a better savings rate the problems of the budget and the trade deficit, the lack of competitiveness due to deteriorating productivity, and the high cost of capital due to a high interest rate structure, could be solved and the economy could be restored to health.

Wayne Angell, an incumbent governor of the Federal Reserve System, has recently provided a diagnosis revealing the causes of the pernicious anemia of personal savings. He says that without an honest money citizens do not have a meaningful incentive to save. He goes on to suggest the remedy. A simple announcement that the Government is committed to fiscal and monetary reforms based on an honestly defined monetary unit would do miracles. It would generate instant enthusiasm, a feeling of well-being, and a high level of personal savings. It would unleash new individual incentives, and unfetter the productive talents of the people. With an honest monetary standard at its disposal, the Government would be less likely to make unnecessary and costly mistakes.

It is indeed very satisfying to know that the common sense to see the virtues of honest money—and the expertise to reform the dollar accordingly—does exist right in the nerve-center of our monetary system: the Federal Reserve Board. Governor Angell is on record as saying that the rate of interest on the public debt could be as low as 2 percent, if the Government could only bring itselves to make money honest once more.

I wish to insert an interview by Izvestia, the Soviet Government daily newspaper, with Governor Angell, as it was excerpted on the editorial page of the Wall Street Journal, October 5, 1989.

PUT THE SOVIET ECONOMY ON GOLDEN RAILS

The Soviet newspaper Izvestia is to publish, in interview form, an exchange between a state Gosbank representative and Wayne Angell, a Federal Reserve governor visiting last month. Excerpts:

What in you opinion is necessary to cure the ills of the Soviet economy, to put it "on new rails"?

You cannot address the apparent ills of the Soviet economy without first introducing a monetary standard of value. I believe the first thing your government should do is define your monetary unit of account, the ruble, in terms of a fixed weight of gold, and make it convertible at that weight to Soviet citizens, as well as to the rest of the world.

A gold-convertible ruble is a most unusual proposal. We have heard convertibility proposed as an eventual goal but not as a first step. Why do you think it should be done first?

Your perestroika reforms face many difficult adjustment problems as you move toward market-oriented socialism. These become impossible problems without a monetary standard of value that is recognized as having predictable value throughout the Soviet Union—and the rest of the world—now and in the future. Having such a standard for your money would ease the difficulties of all your adjustment problems.

Do you mean perestroika cannot succeed without a gold-convertible ruble?

Some believe it might succeed with a mark-, yen- or dollar-convertible ruble, but they realize it would take many years for the Gosbank to obtain central-bank powers and credibility to enable the ruble to trade as a hard currency. Yes, it is my belief that without an honest money, Soviet citizens cannot be expected to respond to the reforms—as they do not have a meaningful incentive. A gold-backed ruble would be seen as an honest money at home and would immediatley trade as a convertible currency internationally. Indeed, I have offered a prediction to several officials of the Soviet government that on the present slow course, the reforms run a very high risk of being set back by a general collapse of confidence in the ruble—an inflationary disintegration.

Why is that?

As long as the Soviet economy was completely controlled at the center, the absence of a real money merely caused a gradual decline in efficiency of your economy relative to the Western market economies. Now that you have decided to move toward growth and competitiveness with the West, opening up market opportunities through cooperatives and other market-oriented initiatives, your system has been divided in half. One still relies on wage and price controls and a state budget allocations system in rubles; the other unleashes individual incentives and is dominated by an attempt to obtain hard currencies, especially the dollar.

How does this affect the confidence of the ruble?

The two systems compete and the market system every day wins new followers because it is more efficient. So each day the ruble system loses a fragment of its utility. The Soviet government, meanwhile, further subsidizes the ruble system by increasing the budget deficit. The budget deficit is funded by issuing more ruble bank notes and accounts. Thus, even as demand for the ruble declines, the supply increases. Where you had been deteriorating at an arithmetic pace, you are on the verge of deteriorating a geometric pace.

If this is so, inflation will accelerate?

Exactly. I have advised officials of your Gosbank of my analysis—that unless something is done quickly, the Soviet economy will face increasing difficulties.

Why do you say a gold standard for the U.S.S.R. is called for? No other country is now on such a convertible standard.

The Western economies have at least a history of gold converitibilty which enabled their currency to start with a base value as they abandoned the Bretton Woods system in 1971. So, the Soviet people can gain if their government issues an understandable monetary unit of value based on gold. Besides, your State Bank does not have the power or authority to limit the growth of bank notes or ruble accounts so as to stabilize the ruble's value. Even if it were to get that authority from the government, it is not likely to have the independence to use it.

Why do you, a central banker in a country that has demonetized gold, select gold in advising the U.S.S.R.?

For one thing, I believe gold and other commodity-price signals have become much more important to U.S. policy making in recent years, as we have experienced inflation pains under a floating exchange-rate system. Gold, after all, remains the most monetary of all commodities, and therefore is the best single conveyor of information as to the appropriate scarcity of money. Secondly, a single commodity with the universal monetary role of gold is much more simple than attempting to explain a properly weighted commodity price index base. Thirdly, the U.S.S.R. has vast gold monetary reserves it is not now using effectively. Your government is one of the largest holders of gold bullion in the world, which would give it great power to establish the credibility of such a policy.

Wouldn't you fear these reserves would be stripped from the government as Soviet citizens sought to convert surplus rubles into gold?

That depends entirely on two questions that the government could easily answer. The first is the ruble/gold exchange rate that the government would announce it would accommodate and defend with its resources. It cannot be too low or reserves will spill out. It cannot be too high or it will force additional inflation on the society, robbing Soviet savers of rubles of the reward of their past labors. The second is the willingness of the U.S.S.R. to commit itself to the discipline of confining government deficits to the level limited by the gold payments of principal and interest required of the gold bonds. You cannot go on a gold standard, then continue to fund unlimited budget deficits with State Bank money creation.

Could you guarantee that by introducing ruble convertibility Soviet gold reserves would not flow out of the country?

All gold reserves will not flow out of the country or flow into hoards held by Soviet citizens provided that the State Bank not accommodate the government budget deficit. This means that the current domestic deficit must be financed with bonds, which of course become readily marketable in Moscow, Leningrad, New York and London if the bonds carry the promise to pay principal and interest in gold. Indeed, I would expect the Soviet Union could step to the front of the line in seeking credit at the lowest possible interest rate. I would bet such bonds would be snapped up around 3%, which would be the lowest governmental interest rate on earth, including Japan's. As markets gain experience with Soviet gold-backed bonds, interest on the bonds could be expected to decline, perhaps approaching 2%, the going rate for U.S. gold-mining-company gold bonds.

What interest rate would Soviet bonds need if the Gosbank had an independent monetary power similar to the Fed?

The exercise of such independent monetary power would require years to gain credibility. In the meantime, Soviet bonds would require an inflation-offsetting premium and an uncertainty premium of perhaps 4% to 6% over that of gold bonds. For instance, if Soviet inflation is currently at 10%, then the expected interest rate would be initially around 18%. If the inflation rate is higher, then it would take proportionally higher interest rates to stabilize the rate of inflation.

Other experts in the West advise that the Soviet Union cannot move to ruble convertibility without more consumer goods in our stores, to "mop up" the surplus ruble overhang. Does this not concern you?

My point is that in a modern industrial economy, consumer goods will not be produced unless there is a predictable monetary value reward. Once the government of the U.S.S.R. announces that it will maintain the ruble's gold value with its considerable resources, demand for the ruble will climb. Soviet citizens and others around the world will want to acquire rubles—not get rid of them. The only way to acquire rubles is to work to get them or, as foreigners, exchange foreign work income for them in the form of foreign exchange. Undoubtedly over time there would be a reserve currency demand for the gold ruble, particularly among countries with close economic and political ties to the U.S.S.R.

How soon do you think it would be before we would see palpable benefits from your plan?

My guess is that the simple announcement would generate instant enthusiasm, a feeling of well-being, among the citizens of the U.S.S.R. Street speculation would disappear overnight and the so-called ruble overhang would be willingly held in deposits by Soviet citizens.

This sounds very optimistic. Would this be all you think is required to assure the success of perestroika?

Not at all. There are important, critical questions of implementing market-oriented reforms leading to the role of prices in allocating resources, and of tax policies that will have to be set right as well. But I advise that your government establish a monetary standard, so that you will be less likely to make unnecessary and costly errors on these other important decisions.

A NEED FOR REASONABLE GUN CONTROL

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I have spoken previously to my colleagues here in the House of Representatives about the tragic events of recent weeks which have occurred in Kentucky.

In Louisville, KY, last month, 8 innocent people lost their lives and 12 others were seriously wounded due to their being assaulted by a crazed individual using an AK–47 assault rifle. In McKee, KY, last month, 12 classmates were held hostage for hours by a heavily armed 15-year-old boy. Due to these events and for other reasons, I have become a cosponsor of H.R. 1190, the Semiautomatic Assault Weapons Act of 1989, legislation which would prevent the importation of and the domestic manufacture of semiautomatic assault weapons with large ammunition feeding devices.

I have received numerous letters and telephone calls about my decision. Some people agree with my decision; some do not. At this time, I would like to share with my colleagues an excellent September 19 letter from my friend and constituent Edgar F. Arnold, Jr., of Madisonville, KY. Mr. Arnold raises several interesting points while explaining why he, too, has changed his views about gun control. For example, he advises that his father raised him "to use guns safely and to respect the National Rifle Association." However, my constituent strongly believes that the unrestricted flow of all kinds of fatal weapons, including armor-piercing bullets, Uzis, and AK-47's, must be halted.

I urge my colleagues to read the letter to me from Edgar F. Arnold., Jr. The letter follows:

September 19, 1989.

Hon. CARROLL HUBBARD,
Rayburn Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I cannot tell you how pleased I am at the news that you have "seen the light"—as have many of your constituents who formerly supported the NRA—about a need for some reasonble gun controls.

My late father was probably a charter member of the National Rifle Association and wrote articles for the American Rifleman when I was a kid. He raised us to use guns safely and to respect the NRA, which used to sponsor lots of good things like local contests for young people, safety forums and even collection of guns to send to the British Home Guard in the dark days when England "stood alone" against the Nazis. I gave them a pretty little .410-gauge double barrel shotgun—and I'm still proud of it. But it's been some time since I was proud of the NRA.

I quit the NRA a couple of years ago when they became a "lunatic fringe" that supports armor-piercing bullets that will penetrate policemen's "flak" suits and bullet-proof vests, opposes any restrictions on plastic handguns that can be smuggled aboard airliners by hijackers, Uzis and AK-47's for everyone and God knows how many other crazy things that honest hunters and homeowners do not need.

Our society is too densely populated and too complicated to allow the unrestricted flow of all kinds of fatal weapons. Just think—repeating shotguns have been restricted to three shots (without reloading) for lots of years, and nobody protests that.

Rifles ought to be restricted to five or six shots and no guns should be available for sale without a reasonable waiting period. Thank you so much.

Sincerely,

EDGAR F. ARNOLD, Jr.

PAIN POLICE

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, there is something wrong with a society that does not tolerate peaceful dissent. I am referring to the phenomenon of "pain police", law enforcement officers who have been putting "choke holds" and "pain grips" on passive, nonviolent protesters involved in Operation Rescue missions. This is the sort of inhumane treatment we witnessed 20 years ago during the civil rights movement; I was as outraged then as I am now. I dare say that years from now when we look back upon the American tragedy of abortion we will deeply regret the brutal treatment of these peaceful protestors.

Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to an unpublished article by Mrs. Judie Brown of the American Life League which details this opprobrious activity. I urge my colleagues to take notice:

POLICEMEN, PRO-LIFERS AND BABIES

(By Judie Brown)

The Armstrong amendment to the 1990 Federal Housing Budget has been causing quite a stir! This amendment simply requires cities and towns to adopt and enforce a policy which would prevent local police from using "unnecessary force" in dealing with "non-violent civil rights protestors."

It seems that those who are usually staunch advocates of civil rights are a bit dismayed by the thought of pro-life protestors actually being treated with respect by local police forces. Even though all civil rights demonstrators would be protected by this new Congressional amendment, the thought of pro-lifers being protected caused one pro-abortion Denver attorney, Terre Lee Rushton, to explain: "I'm generally in favor of protecting people who are validly trying to protect their civil rights. But this scares me." [1]

Though the many instances of police brutality toward pro-life protestors have not generated national attention, the fact remains that such unjust treatment does occur. While peaceful protests have always been a part of the fabric of this American society, the instances of such excessive police abuse during arrests of pro-life protestors have no historical equal, at least not in the United States.

Imagine arrested women in Pittsburgh being strip-searched by male guards. Contemplate a priest and a bishop in Hartford being dragged across the pavement with their faces pressed to the ground; or men in Los Angeles having their arms and wrists broken.[2]

I am not describing the arrests of armed criminals here. I am describing the arrests of peaceful, non-violent protestors who knew they would be arrested and simply went limp rather than leave the entrances of abortion chambers where babies were to be executed by abortion.

Because of these abuses of a protestor's civil right to defend the innocent from harm, Congress has determined that police brutality is really not necessary. Why does this scare anti-life attorneys too?

". . . the common-law privilege of necessity would justify one in entering somebody's house to prevent the latter from knifing a person to death, it would not justify intrustion to prevent him from destroying his own property." [3] But the Supreme Court stated in 1973 that the preborn child is not a person, but rather, the "property" of the pregnant mother. So when pro-life protestors decry the killing by public demonstrations and sit-ins, they become anathema to those who are dedicated to abortion on demand.

The pro-life protestor becomes the living witness to the living person in the womb who will soon be denied life if business goes forward as usual. The pro-life protestor is to be shunned; his or her civil rights are to be ignored or denied; the idea that the innocent baby also has civil rights is to be denied; the rights of Americans to protest the killing are to be challenged at every opportunity!

The Armstrong amendment, then, gives credence to the civil rights of people who "scare" some because they are trying to save the lives of others.

The non-violent pro-life protester has learned the following:

"What modern science tells us about the complexity of the single-celled human zygote—already 'programmed' to transform itself into the trillions of cells which make up the adult human body—easily persuades us that it is in no sense 'rudimentary' or 'simple' life; it is complex and marvelous, as a single cell, as the human organism is at any subseqent stage of its natural development. The zygote, or the blastocyst, or the embryo, or the fetus—names of the same human organism at different stages of continuous natural development—is every bit as much as the child or the adult, as the Psalmist says: 'fearfully and wonderfully made.' (Psalms 138:13)" [4] Indeed, Jeremiah 1:5 specifies: "Before I formed you in the womb, I knew you."

Or, in simpler terms, an innocent human being's life begins at the moment of fertilization and, thus, is deserving of protection under the law from that moment on.

So, while it is legal to arrest those who non-violently protest, who are asked to leave, and who choose to stay, it should not be legal to abuse these people. As they are carried away to jail, their prayers ascend the heaven—prayers for the policemen who are only doing their civil duty, prayers for the doctors who are only doing their civil duty, prayers for the doctors who are killing babies, prayers for the mothers who are destroying their children.

And, I believe I am accurate in stating that as long as one innocent baby's life is threatened by the abortionist's greed or the pharmacist's prescription, there will be loving pro-life people who will place their bodies between life and death. A broken arm will not stop them, a scarred face will not deter them for in their suffering they have a peace in Christ that those who deploy the armaments for aborting children do not now know.

Be gentle, Mr. Policeman. They love you! And, God loves you too.

A TRIBUTE TO BISHOP JOHN T. WALKER

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, today this city and this Nation laid to rest a good and decent man, Bishop John T. Walker, the Episcopal Bishop of Washington and Dean of Washington National Cathedral.

Bishop Walker was truly a man for all seasons, because he daily lived out the gospel mandate that, here on Earth, God's work must truly be our own.

During the years that I worked with him on a variety of issues, both domestic and foreign,

I found him to be a person of extraordinary wisdom and understanding, but most of all, one of those rare people whose very essence was that of true compassion and charity toward all God's children.

Bishop Walker was in the forefront of the struggle here in Washington and across America for social and economic justice, especially for the most disadvantaged and least fortunate among us. He carried that concern for true human rights and personal freedom into the international arena, where he was an outspoken advocate against the evil system of apartheid in South Africa. More than most, he understood the dark night of the soul that must give way to the new dawn of hope for all in that oppressed land.

In 1982 Bishop Walker also testified before my ad hoc hearings panel on the full implications of the military budget. In eloquent terms he made the moral case for the restoration of sanity in defusing cold war tensions and an end to the escalating madness of the nuclear arms race. He asked us to go beyond the constricting boundaries of nationalism and ideology to search for new international common denominators of justice and brotherhood and sisterhood.

We, the living, can best honor him in death by renewing and intensifying our collective commitment to the cause of peace and social justice for all—goals for which he struggled so nobly and so humanely during the course of a life devoted to his God and to the service of his fellow human beings.

INTRODUCTION OF AIDS HOUSING OPPORTUNITIES ACT

HON. JAMES A. McDERMOTT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. JAMES A. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, one of the tragic difficulties confronting people living with AIDS and related illnesses is the lack of decent, affordable, and appropriate housing. In addition to the devastating effects of the illness itself, people with AIDS must also often cope with sudden impoverishment, discrimination, and the lack of resources to help meet their needs. Consequently, many individuals with AIDS are confronted with few choices—life on the street, inadequate care in emergency shelters, or isolation in a hospital.

The AIDS Housing Opportunities Act, which I developed jointly with my colleagues Repesentatives PELOSI and SCHUMER, is intended to address only one of the many complicated issues regarding AIDS today—but it is one of the most fundamental problems facing persons with AIDS. As a physician, I know it is impossible for patients to fight an illness on the streets.

Persons living with AIDS face extraordinary circumstances. They cannot wait for the bureaucracy to slowly work its way around to them, or for housing assistance that may become available months or years down the road, or for backed-up courts to act on unlawful discrimination. For persons living with AIDS, a waiting list is no prescription for relief.

The choice between homelessness and institutionalization is both dehumanizing and unnecessarily expensive. In Seattle, 1 day in a hospital bed costs the taxpayers $650, while living independently in a rental apartment costs less than $40 a day plus services. This legislation will expand access to independent living opportunities and provide new residential alternatives for those incapable of living fully independently, but not in need of hospital care.

PRESIDENTIAL COMMISSION

In 1988, the final report of the Presidential Commission on the Human Immunodeficiency Virus Epidemic contained more than 600 recommendations. Among them was the need for greater involvement by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development in meeting the housing needs of persons living with AIDS and related illnesses.

Persons living with AIDS have urgent and unique housing needs that are not adequately addressed by current HUD programs. While some existing programs could be useful, they are already overburdened with long waiting lists and are not tailored to the special needs of this population group.

As the number of persons with AIDS increases so will the need for decent and appropriate housing. Meanwhile, progress in improving the quality of life for persons living with AIDS offers hope for prolonging lives. Such welcome advances will create even greater pressure on the limited housing resources appropriate for these individuals.

MEETING A SPECTRUM OF HOUSING NEEDS

Persons living with AIDS have a spectrum of housing needs including emergency short-term housing and supportive services for the homeless, emergency aid to prevent homelessness by enabling individuals to remain in their own homes, rental subsidies for individuals capable of independent living, community residential living for those individuals unable to live fully independently, and more intensive care for individuals who become more ill.

The AIDS Housing Opportunities Act will address a number of these housing needs by authorizing $290 million in 1990 and again in 1991. The act has three primary goals: To prevent homelessness among persons with AIDS; to reduce the costs of care for persons living with AIDS; and to enhance the quality of life of persons with AIDS by enabling them to participate more fully in community life.

The legislation seeks to fulfill these goals by providing funds for a variety of programs. Each of these programs would be administered by HUD:

First, grants to provide housing information to people with AIDS and to coordinate efforts in local communities to increase AIDS housing resources.

Second, demonstration projects to prevent homelessness and to provide short-term supported housing and services for persons living with AIDS and related diseases.

Third, permanent and transitional housing for persons living with AIDS and related diseases, through section 8 certificates for existing housing, McKinney Act section 8 assistance for moderate rehabilitation of single room occupancy dwellings, and a new grant program for community residences and services.

HOMELESSNESS

The most urgent need we must address is the growing number of homeless persons with AIDS. The emergence of homelessness among this group is symptomatic, as is homelessness among the general population, of the much larger problem of a shortage of affordable and appropriate housing.

The Presidential Commission's report touched in detail on the needs of homeless persons with AIDS, and the lack of adequate shelter and services for these individuals. Even when homeless persons with AIDS have access to temporary shelter, most of these facilities do not provide the critical support services they need. Persons with AIDS are especially vulnerable to communicable diseases, and they are at great risk on the streets and in shelters, where communicable diseases are prevalent.

Currently, there are more than 50,000 persons living with AIDS in America and an unknown number of the estimated 1.5 million Americans infected with the AIDS virus have HIV-related illnesses. A 43-city survey in 1988 estimated the number of homeless persons living with AIDS at 20,000. Roughly 25 percent of these individuals live in New York City, and that number is expected to triple in the next 5 years. Of the cities surveyed, 94 percent urged that special funds be earmarked through Federal programs to homeless persons with AIDS.

Our first priority, and the most cost-effective approach, must be to prevent homelessness—providing mortgage, rent, or utility payments to avoid eviction or foreclosure. That is one of the lessons learned from the Stewart B. McKinney Act passed in 1987.

For those individuals that fall through the safety net, then we must begin to fund short-term supportive housing that not only meets emergency needs, but leads to opportunities to permanent housing linked with appropriate services.

Finally, we must provide better opportunities for those who are unable to live fully independently, but who do not require hospitalization. Such alternatives not only delay or prevent more costly institutionalization, but enable individuals to maintain a degree of self-reliance and live in dignity.

EMERGING PROBLEMS AMONG FAMILIES AND MINORITIES

With roughly 1½ million Americans infected with the AIDS virus, we can expect the housing crisis for persons with AIDS to deepen. We should begin preparing for this reality now by putting in place the programs that can make such a difference in the lives of these individuals and their families.

We should also begin preparing for the new paths this disease will take. Increasingly the HIV virus is being transmitted through intravenous drug use. As we know too well, drug use affects individuals and families among all walks of life and in all communities. Perhaps the most tragic example is the transmission of the AIDS virus from mother to infant.

While the magnitude and rate of spread of AIDS is not precise, it is expected that the incidence of AIDS will continue to increase among heterosexual individuals and their families. We have seen the desperate effects of poverty and homelessness on children and families. We need to do all we can to prevent families from facing the triple burdens of poverty, homelessness, and AIDS.

We must also pay special attention to the needs of the minority community, which experiences, a disproportionate share of AIDS cases. In 1987 AIDS was the 10th leading cause of death for blacks, compared to 15th for the general population. Since January 1988, more than half of all AIDS cases reported have been among minority groups. According to reports last year, of all cases of AIDS in women, 51 percent are black and 20 percent are Hispanic.

We already know that a glaring disparity exists in health care generally between whites and minorities. We should make a special effort to see that this illness does not widen that gap.

SUCCESSFUL MODELS

The human devastation wrought by this illness leads many of us to despair and a sense of hopelessness. In reality, community-based models, have emerged in many cities like Seattle, San Francisco, and New York. While the resources are lacking to fully meet all needs in these cities, we are beginning to understand which approaches can work.

In my local community, the public sector has joined with the private and nonprofit sectors—including the Northwest AIDS Foundation, AIDS Housing of Washington, and numerous foundations and religious organizations—to piece together a network of housing opportunities. These housing options range from independent housing to the development of a new 32-bed facility to provide a continuum of care for people living with AIDS. But even these forward-looking efforts are projected to be able to help only 25 percent of those who will need housing assistance in 1991.

Persons with AIDS face enough tough choices without having to worry about a roof over their heads. Our local communities are showing us the way to address this problem and this legislation will provide the resources and flexibility to help fuel these community-based efforts to provide housing opportunities for persons living with AIDS.

I want to thank Representatives SCHUMER and PELOSI for their cosponsorship of this legislation, and I urge my colleagues to support our efforts to provide persons with AIDS the chance to live decently and with dignity.

DANGEROUS ENVIRONMENTAL SITUATION WITHIN THE SOVIET UNION

HON. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, perestroika and glasnost are initiatives which are slowly permitting the world to penetrate the Iron Curtain of the Soviet Union. The country's sick economic and ecological situation, as well as social and regional issues are obvious to the world.

The world had not, however, been aware of the truly dangerous environmental situation within the Soviet Union. It is so disastrous that in some areas the country is already beyond help. The effects of unchecked and inefficient industrialization have devastated portions of the country.

Although the obstacles that face Gorbachev in his efforts to reform the backward Soviet economy have been well documented, few are aware of the serious Soviet environmental situation. When compared to the United States, the Soviet condition is startling. The EPA estimates that the U.S. emits 2.7 billion pounds of toxic chemicals into the air each year. In the Ukraine alone, 22 billion pounds of toxic materials were discharged into the atmosphere by local industries. In fact, in one Ukrainian city, Zaporozhe, industry annually discharges 800 million pounds of toxic garbage into the air annually. That is one-fifth of the U.S. total.

One-fifth of the entire Soviet population face severe health risks. Air-pollution levels in 104 Soviet cities are believed to be 10 times above acceptable levels established by the Soviet Government. If you can believe it, gas masks have been issued to thousands of families living in the Ukrainian city of Khnelnitskii because of unhealthy air.

The Soviet water supply also has not been spared. In the Smolensk district, where a light bulb factory operates on the shores of the Dnieper River, mercury levels rose 140 times above acceptable levels. Local doctors and managers of the factory conspired to cover up this catastrophe. Only when local schoolchildren began suffering from loss of eyesight, trembling hands, and various other symptoms that are indicative of mercury poisoning, did this poisoning come to light.

The Aral Sea, which at one point, was the world's fourth largest inland sea, has lost 60 percent of its water and most of its fish. Salt from the dry beds blow 200 miles and enters the drinking water of Nukus, capital of the Karakalpak Autonomous Republic of 1.2 million in Central Asia.

The cause of the shrinkage was diversion of the Amu-Darya and Syr-Darya Rivers to irrigate Uzbekistan's cotton fields. Concerns were expressed in 1962 regarding the risks, but cotton took priority. From 1960 to 1980 Government and party officials exaggerated crop yields by 15 to 30 percent, were paid for these fictitious amounts and unforgivably pocketed millions of rubles.

The effects of this total neglects of the environment in the Soviet Union is now beginning to take its toll on the population. Estimates as high as 16 percent of all Soviet babies are born with some sort of physical or mental defect. In Moscow, where life expectancy in the past 20 years has dropped by an average of 10 years, people there have 50 percent more birth defects than the national average.

And finally, in the city of Sumgait in Azerbaijan, authorities estimate 65 percent of all newborn children are blue babies. The reason is that there is not an adequate amount of oxygen in the mother's womb. The irreversible damage to future generations that has already been done is clear.

In the Soviet Union there is no equivalent to the Environmental Protection Agency. The most recent effort to establish such an agency was doomed to an already infamous Soviet bureaucratic powerplay. In January 1988, a Fydor Morgun was appointed to head the State Committee for the Protection of Environment, known as the Goskompriroda. Morgun was given such broad powers that it appeared the environment was to be the next priority concern, after disarmament, for the Soviet Government. Morgun genuinely seemed to be a go-getter and not an apparatchik. However, Morgun resigned in June 1989, just 6 months after an unsuccessful attempt to reform the Soviet environmental bureaucracy. Since then eight people declined the post before the position was finally filled.

What is responsible for this very disturbing situation? The Communist system of government is responsible, of course, with its apathy inside of, or on top of, an already top-heavy bureaucracy. Despite accounting for only about 10 percent of the entire Soviet population, the Communist Party, the lone political party in the Soviet Union, controls policy throughout the country. That policy is devoutly aligned with Marxist ideology, which, among other things, states that the land and the water are free goods and accessible to any enterprise.

Since the Government owns the means of production, there is no incentive to protect the environment. Ecology is not considered when calculating the cost of producing goods. There is also no compelling need to monitor the environment. In a market-oriented atmosphere, it is quite profitable for manufacturers to use energy efficient machinery, equipment, and proficient fuels to run that equipment. The incentive is inherent in the system. In such an economy, political pressure is allowed to have a tremendous impact on the extent to which environmental concerns are addressed. This pressure is applied by various special interest groups, which are becoming more powerful and vocal, not only in this country, but in parts of the world.

In the Soviet Union these groups are emerging. The Green movement is becoming more vocal but their influence is still minimal Some have estimated that one-fourth to one-third of the Members of the Congress of People's Deputies could be considered a Green. The number will certainly increase with future free elections.

With the deficit gobbling up about 12 to 14 percent of the entire Soviet GNP and the ruble valued at about 10 cents on the black market—a more realistic estimate than the artificial rate of $1.50 established by the Soviet government—stiff austerity measures seem sure to be implemented. This exemplifies one of the various "catch-22" situations facing Soviet leaders.

In the last 4½ years the economic status of the average Soviet citizen has actually deteriorated. Local dissatisfaction is becoming more widespread and vociferous. Many are beginning to remember the years of Brezhnev more fondly. It is fair to say that Gorbachev is more popular in this country than in his own.

The deadly environmental situation in the Soviet Union has not been addressed, and the likelihood of it being satisfactorily addressed in the future is bleak. The estimated price-tag to clean up the Aral Sea alone is over $88 billion. Mr. Gorbachev and his supporters obviously have other priorities. Contrary to rhetoric, the Soviet Union continues to spend billions of dollars, both directly and indirectly, on foreign military adventures, rather than on the health of the Soviet people.

Between January and May of this year, the Soviet Union made 29 arms shipments to Nicaragua worth approximately $175 million. This was the most expensive investment to the Sandinistas since they came to power. What a waste of money. What a foolish priority.

The average monthly arms shipments by the Soviet Government of Najibullah have been increased to $300 million. It is another foolish priority.

Perestroika and glasnost are visionary initiatives when put in the context of the past 70 years of Communist rule. Gorbachev's effort to reform his country is a monumental chore that should be encouraged. But when one looks beyond rhetoric, one must question the true intentions and motives of these current Soviet leaders. After almost 5 years, the air is still lethal to breathe and the water is not fit to drink.

These conditions belong to a Third World nation, and should not continue to be ignored by a world class leader, or groups of leaders of a major power. Soviet ecological policy, or lack thereof, is killing people.

TRIBUTE TO BILL MOTT

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a dedicated and honorable public servant, Mr. William Penn Mott.

Bill, an honorary life fellow of the American Institute of Park Executives, has dedicated many years to his State and Nation through his work with the Park Service. His contributions stretch considerably beyond his more than 20 years as a park executive. I know that my colleagues will agree that Bill's devotion to his work and community warrants our honoring him on the auspicious occasion of his 80th birthday on October 19.

Bill's work with the Park Service began in 1946 when he was the superintendent of parks in Oakland, CA. His distinguished Park Service career continued as general manager of the East Bay Regional Park District, director of California State Department of Parks and Recreation, and director-consultant of Moraga Park and Recreation Authority. He has also been the Director of the National Park Service since 1985.

His impact on the lives of others has stretched beyond the border of the United States. He was a consultant to the Commonwealth of Australia's Department of the Interior. He also worked as a consultant for the U.S. Department International Cooperative Administrations of U.S. Operations mission to Costa Rica for the Institute of Inter-American Affairs.

Even more impressive is Bill's continued devotion to the community through public service. He has been a president or director of the following organizations: Save the Redwood League, Metropolitan YMCA of Alameda County, Goodwill Industries of Oakland, Diablo Valley United Crusade, Booth Memorial Hospital, Save San Francisco Bay Association, Rotary Club of Oakland, California Conservation Council, Oakland Council of Churches, and the California Roadside Council. As well, Bill is a member of numerous associations and the recipient of many prestigious awards.

This long list of credentials is based on a solid educational background which has made Bill an asset to the Park Service and community. He received his bachelor of science in landscape architecture from Michigan State University. He continued his education at the University of California, Berkeley, where he received his master of science in the same field.

Mr. Speaker, I know that my colleagues join with me today in the sincere best wishes to Bill not only on the occasion of his 80th birthday, but in future endeavors as well. Bill Mott's devotion, hard work, and dedication are an inspiring example to us all. I extend my best wishes to Bill Mott and his family.

CAPITAL GAINS FOLLIES

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my fellow Members an article in today's Washington Post on the folly of a capital gains cut. There is no correlation between tax benefits and increased savings, increased productivity, increased competitiveness, or new jobs. What we have learned all too well is that tax benefits can increase investments in tax shelters such as jojoba bean farms, oyster farms, windmills, and empty office buildings.

Tax benefits are an inefficient way to change economic policy. The inefficiency of even the most hallowed of tax incentives, the R&D tax credit, has recently been demonstrated by a GAO report. According to the GAO, the R&D tax credit cost $7 billion in tax revenues from 1981 to 1985 but stimulated between $1 billion and $2.5 billion over the same period. That means that for every dollar that was untaxed due to the R&D tax credit, there was an increase in R&D of only 15 to 36 cents over the R&D that would otherwise have been achieved.

There is no reason to think a capital gains cut will be any more efficient in spurring new investment. The one thing we do know about a capital gains cut is that it will give a major tax cut to the richest Americans at a time when our Federal deficit is still over $100 billion. To my way of thinking, that is reason enough to oppose a capital gains reduction.

The article follows:

BUSH'S FOLLY

(Robert J. Samuelson)

Every so often, Congress and the White House pass a law that is farsighted and courageous. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 was such a law. It embraced the sensible motion that the tax system's main purpose is to raise government revenues and not to engage in dubious feats of economic or social engineering. Subverting this accomplishment is an act of folly. It is George Bush's folly.

Of course, Bush disclaims any desire to undo tax reform. But should Congress heed his advice to lower the tax on capital gains—as seems increasingly likely—there can be no other effect. Cutting the capital gains tax once again legitimizes the silly notion that the economy can be "micromanaged" through the tax system. This is merely a respectable camouflage for what's really happening. The tax code is again being used as pork barrel, with favors distributed to powerful interest groups.

So it's back to the future. Already, the tax game is being played as it was before 1986. Rival packages of tax goodies are vying for public support. In the House, a coalition of Republicans and breakaway Democrats has passed a version of Bush's plan. And the Democratic leadership is countering with a proposal to expand Individual Retirement Accounts.

Passage of tax reform was a magic moment in politics. President Reagan wanted a dramatic reduction in tax rates as a part of his legacy. A majority in Congress recognized that the proliferation of tax breaks (credits, deductions and other preferences) had gotten out of control. People say the system as increasingly arbitrary and unfair. Every group wanted its own tax break because it felt every other group had a break. The 1986 law struck a new bargan. Tax breaks were trimmed in return for a sharp cut in overall tax rates.

Capital gains are profits from the sale of financial assets (stocks, bonds) or property. Part of the 1986 compromise involved eliminating the special low rate on these gains. The maximum capital gains rate was then 20 percent compared with a top individual rate of 50 percent. Under the 1986 law, capital gains are taxed at the same rates as ordinary income, with the top rates varying between 28 and 33 percent.

The argument that a lower capital gains rate would stimulate saving or create jobs is mostly propaganda, New high-tech companies are often protrayed as major beneficiaries, but most of the money for these firms comes from tax-exempt investors (such as pension funds) that aren't affected by capital gains taxes. More important, repeated efforts to influence total savings or investment through the tax code have yielded meager results.

Consider the 1980s' experience. At the start of the decade, the combination of changes in Federal Reserve policy and the 1981 tax act created a host of incentives for higher saving:

"Real" (inflation-adjusted) interest rates rose. This made saving more profitable.

Inflation dropped. This made saving less risky.

Overall tax rates declined, allowing individuals and businesses to keep more of their income from saving.

The top tax on capital gains dropped. This allowed investors to keep more of their profits.

Special incentives for saving—tax-exempt IRAs—were dramatically liberalized.

Each of these changes favored higher saving. Together, they should have had a clear impact. So what happened? The private savings rate (business plus individual savings) declined slightly. Between 1982 and 1986, it averaged 17.1 percent of gross national product, down from 18 percent between 1975 and 1981.

In fact, the private savings rate (savings as a share of GNP) hasn't changed much since the late 19th century, as economist Edward Dension of the Brookings Institution has repeatedly pointed out. This stability has prevailed despite huge rises in federal taxes, big gains in life expectancy and major changes in institutions (including the advent of Social Security and private pensions). We can't explain the stability, but it means that savings can't be altered easily by changes in the tax code.

As a practical matter, lowering the capital gains tax would mainly reduce taxes on the sale of existing investments. The wealthiest 10 percent of households own about 90 percent of the individually held stocks and bonds. They would be the major beneficiaries, along with any business owners or farmers who sell property. These are articulate groups that are big political donors. Helping them would be fine if the tax cuts also stimulated higher economic growth. Not only is this unlikely, but a permanent cut would probably reduce tax revenues. Either the budget deficit or someone else's taxes would go up.

Tax reform aimed to stop—or at least slow down—the constant rearranging of tax burdens. Of course, the law wouldn't be instantly dismantled if the capital gains rate is cut. But Bush's crusade undermines the reform in two critical ways.

First, it declares an open season for new tax breaks. To survive, tax reform requires mutual self-restraint by Republicans and Democrats. Every politician wants to win preferential treatment for some group or cause. Resisting that impulse requires a political climate in which everyone agrees to forgo short-term advantage for a larger public benefit. Political leaders, starting with the president, must decry selective tax breaks as an undesirable form of back-door spending. This consensus was always fragile. Bush is rapidly destroying it.

The second problem is arithmetic. By eroding the tax base, new tax breaks create pressures to raise overall tax rates. In turn, higher rates spur more groups to seek new tax breaks. The bigger the bite on taxable income, the greater the reason to have income declared nontaxable or to have it taxed at a lower rate. This is the vicious circle that the 1986 law tries to break.

Perhaps the Senate can detail the capital gains bandwagon. But if not, the winners will ultimately be all the lobbyists, lawyers and accountants who feast on a complex, ever-changing tax code. They must be celebrating. George Bush is their kind of president.

A NEW WORLD'S RECORD OF COCAINE SEIZURES

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend Federal and local law enforcement authorities for their narcotics seizure on September 29, 1989, of 20 metric tons of cocaine, along with $10 million in cash, that was stashed in a Los Angeles warehouse.

This enormous 44,000 pounds of cocaine, a new world's record seizure, has an estimated wholesale value of $2 billion and, if sold on the streets would yield an estimated $7 billion.

The seizure also breaks the world's record seizure by Colombian law enforcement officials who had seized 10 metric tons of cocaine at a jungle laboratory in Tranquilanda, Colombia in March 1984, and it far exceeds the U.S. record of 4 metric tons of cocaine seized at Fort Lauderdale, FL in November 1987.

Hopefully, the $10 million cash seizure will be distributed to our front line Federal and local law enforcement agencies to enhance their efforts in combatting the drug traffickers.

This record Los Angeles cocaine seizure is surprisingly only one of the major seizures recently. Yesterday in Harlingen, TX, authorities seized almost 18,000 pounds of cocaine in a rural house 5 miles north of the Mexican border. That seizure is the largest cocaine seizure in Texas and is second in the United States, topped only by the Los Angeles seizure.

Also on October 4, the U.S. Coast Guard escorted to New Orleans a ship carrying 11,500 pounds of cocaine. The seizure represents the largest maritime cocaine seizure in history. The 185 foot offshore supply vessel was flying the Panamanian flag.

These record cocaine seizures clearly indicate that first rate intelligence pays off. Our law enforcement agents and intelligence specialists should be commended for their cooperative efforts in making these seizures possible.

As we commend these successes we must not become complacent; rather, we must intensify our efforts to provide our Federal, State and local law enforcement officials with the adequate personnel, and equipment, and technology to combat the drug traffickers, whose ruthless reign of terror is paralyzing the political, economic, and social institutions of nations throughout the world.

AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE HONORS KENNETH JENNE II

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, on October 19, the Institute of Human Relations of the American Jewish Committee will honor Kenneth C. Jenne II with the Learned Hand Award for superior contribution to the betterment of society and the legal profession.

I have had the pleasure of calling Ken Jenne my dear friend for many years. For a part of that time, I also called him colleague. We entered the Florida Legislature together in 1979; he to serve in the senate, while I took a seat in the House. During the 10 years that he served in the Florida senate, he was the recipient of the Allen Morris Award for Most Effective Member of the senate on three occasions and the recipient of the Legislator of the Year Award in 1982 from the Human Services Advocates of Broward County.

Ken also held office on the local level. He has served the community in numerous capacities and continues to play an active role today. He has served as director of the Broward County Charter Commission as well as a member and later chairman of the Broward County Commission. He is currently a senior partner in the law firm of Atkinson, Jenne, Diner, Stone and Cohen of Hollywood, FL, while continuing to serve on the boards of many community and professional organizations.

The many contributions to public service that Ken Jenne has made over the years has earned him the highest respect among his friends and colleagues. Ken exemplifies the qualities of integrity and commitment by which he has lived his life on a personal, professional, and political level. His outstanding leadership and tireless commitment to serving the people of the State of Florida has earned him well-deserved accolades. He is truly worthy of this latest recognition.

Ken is a devoted family man, and I know that his wife, Caroline, and children, Evan and Sarah, are very proud of him. I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Ken Jenne on receiving this prestigious honor.

INTRODUCTION OF THE NATIONAL HISTORIC PRESERVATION POLICY ACT OF 1989

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, today, SAM GEJDENSON, GEORGE BROWN, and I are introducing the National Historic Preservation Policy Act of 1989, a comprehensive rewrite of our Nation's historic preservation laws.

Our country has numerous laws such as the National Historic Preservation Act, the Historic Sites Act, and the Archeological Resources Protection Act designed to protect our national heritage. Despite that, according to a 1985 National Park Service study, that year 430 indicents of vandalism to archaeological sites were reported on just Federal land, and the number has grown since then.

Despite all the legislation on the books, there is no coordinated Federal policy on historical preservation. This bill will clarify and strengthen our national policy goals, particularly for Federal lands and for lands that may be developed with Federal assistance, and also provides practical guidance and assistance to private developers to spur them to make preservation-oriented decisions when developing property.

I am excited about this legislation, which was really drafted by my good friend from Georgia, Senator WYCHE FOWLER, a noted conservationist and friend of historic preservation. He deserves the credit for pulling this bill together, and I look forward to working with him and the various congressional committees in enacting this, or similar legislation.

I urge my colleagues to join SAM, GEORGE, WYCHE, and me in sponsoring this important legislation.

LEGISLATIVE ACTION NEEDED ON ASSAULT WEAPONS

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise again today in support of Federal legislation banning assault weapons and legislation creating a Federal 7-day waiting period before a handgun can be purchased.

Months before the tragic shooting in September at the Standard Gravure plant in my hometown of Louisville, City Alderman Jerry Kleier was spearheading local efforts to outlaw assault weapons.

This is not a simple task since Kentucky State law seems to prohibit passage of local ordinances limiting firearm use or ownership. Alderman Kleier, in cooperation with members of the Jefferson County delegation to the Kentucky General Assembly, is preparing legislation for the 1990 session of the assembly to allow local elected officials to address firearm issues.

The September 14 shooting has brought renewed attention to these commendable efforts. I salute Alderman Kleier—and all the other elected leaders whom I have cited in my earlier floor statements on the subject—for their interest and their efforts to pass responsible firearms legislation. I wish them good luck and am ready to help in any way I can.

TRIBUTE TO HIS HOLINESS THE DALAI LAMA OF TIBET—RECIPIENT OF THE NOBEL PEACE PRIZE

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, today, is a historic day for human rights. Today, the Nobel Peace Prize Committee in Oslo, Norway, announced that the Peace Prize for this year will be awarded to His Holiness the Dalai Lama of Tibet.

There could be no more fitting or appropriate recipient of this high honor. His Holiness has led the struggle for human rights for his Tibetan people, who have been subjected to brutal Chinese repression and denial of their fundamental rights and freedoms, and he has been a beacon of inspiration around the globe to all those who seek change through peaceful, nonviolent means. Mr. Speaker, the Noble Committee could have made no better choice of an individual who exemplifies the ideals of the Nobel Peace Prize.

There could be no more fitting or appropriate day to receive this joyful announcement than October 5. Today marks the anniversary of the signing of legislation making the Holocaust hero Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of the United States. In New York last July, His Holiness the Dalai Lama was the recipient of the Raoul Wallenberg Congressional Human Rights Award, given in recognition of his outstanding international contributions to the cause of human rights by the Congressional Human Rights Foundation. The awarding of the Nobel Peace Prize adds additional emphasis and recognition for his outstanding contributions to peace and brotherhood.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Congress are delighted to see His Holiness receive this most deserved honor. We have had a long and warm relationship with him. In September 1987, at a meeting with members of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, the Dalai Lama unveiled his "Five Point Peace Plan" for the peaceful resolution of the Tibetan issue with China. That presentation was tragically followed by protests in which Chinese soldiers responded to peaceful demonstrations with violent and brutal reprisals against the Tibetan people.

We in the Congress have supported in the past—and we will continue to support in the future—the human rights of the Tibetan people against the brutal Chinese efforts to suppress them. In recognition of the outstanding contribution of His Holiness the Dalai Lama to peaceful cooperation and the observance of human rights, the Congressional Human Rights Caucus was delighted to nominate the Dalai Lama for this honor.

Mr. Speaker, we are truly delighted to pay tribute to His Holiness today on his being awarded the Nobel Prize.

RECOGNITION OF WORLD WAR II SERVICE

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to a lady in Harrisburg, PA, who is as much a casualty of war as any soldier. She is also as brave and resilient as any solidier I have ever known.

During World War II, Marie Bachman Rhine was a nurse in the Pacific. Her experiences include being locked in the hold of a transport ship in a convoy under kamikaze attack. She was buffeted by typhoons, felled by a shelling and exposed to DDT and the fallout of two atomic attacks on Japan.

She served in the 233d General Hospital Unit on Okinawa. This unit consisted of 84 nurses, 58 doctors, and more than 500 support personnel. Marie was part of a 10-nurse detachment assigned to treat naval personnel.

Marie Rhine risked her life and her health to serve this country. As a result of her commitment, she has been in and out of hospitals since her return to the United States in 1945. She was diagnosed with cancer 2 weeks after her arrival, followed by a circulatory disease that eventually claimed her right leg.

But at the age of 82 Marie is going strong. In fact, she has been actively involved in organizing the first-ever reunion of the 233d General Hospital Unit in Harrisburg.

I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing Marie Bachman Rhine and the courageous Americans with whom she served so well in World War II.

SALUTE TO THE GENE TAYLOR VETERANS OUTPATIENT CLINIC

HON. JACK BUECHNER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute my retired colleague from my home State of Missouri, and to thank Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT from Arkansas for his recent initiative which would name the new Department of Veterans' Affairs hospital in Mount Vernon, MI, the Gene Taylor Veterans' Outpatient Clinic. It is an admirable salute to a distinguished career of public service, and it is a fitting honor to our retired colleague from southern Missouri.

In his 16 years in the House, Gene became known as a straightforward, hard-working legislator who was not given so much to the high debate characteristic of this assembly, nor to the pomp and circumstance involved with Congress. Instead, our colleague concerned himself with the day-to-day business of legislation, with the sort of to-the-point industrious approach characteristic of the Ozark country where he was raised.

He was untiring when it came to representing the people of the Missouri's Seventh District, and his commitment to the welfare of our Nation's veterans was unparalleled. His consistent support of VA hospitals in the Seventh District makes it seem especially fitting that he should be commemorated by an institution he consistently worked to augment and protect.

Mr. Speaker, we as Congressmen have a unique opportunity to serve people and causes, and we can only hope that when we retire, we can look back on our careers content with the fact that we consistently worked to do just that. Gene Taylor is certainly an example of a former Congressman whose career was always one of service first. I know that the Gene Taylor Veterans' Clinic will reflect our retired colleague's commitment to public service.

RECOGNITION OF THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE 4-H YOUTH PROGRAM

HON. BOB TRAXLER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to pay tribute to one of the truly outstanding programs offered to our Nation's young people—the 4-H Youth Program. Seeing as how the first full week in October is traditionally celebrated as "National 4-H Week" and that this year marks the 75th anniversary of 4-H, I feel that it is only fitting that we take a moment to recognize the past accomplishments of the 4-H Program and to reflect on 4-H's potential to assist youth in the future.

Of course, when many people think of 4-H, the first thing that comes to mind are images of farm children raising livestock, poultry, and crops. While this is certainly one aspect of 4-H, the 4-H Program offers both urban and rural youth much more.

Through the more than 130 projects and initiatives that it offers, 4-H works to develop leadership skills, citizenship, and self-esteem among our youth. Moreover, 4-H's growing involvement with schools on issues such as drugs, youth at risk, and latchkey kids has demonstrated that 4-H can and does have a positive effect in preparing our young people to deal with all aspects of life.

Today, approximately 5 million youth across this country participate in the 4-H Youth Program. Of those, 22 percent live in central cities of over 50,000. While many people don't realize it, 4-H—which as any good 4-H'er knows stands for head, heart, health, and hands—is the Nation's largest out-of-school youth development program for youngsters 9 to 19 years.

But that's not all—last year alone over 640,000 4-H volunteer leaders worked directly and indirectly with youth. The average 4-H volunteer donated 220 hours in preparing for and teaching these youngsters, while they drove 300 to 400 miles for 4-H in their personally owned car and spent $40 to $60 on teaching materials. The estimated value of the total time volunteers devote to 4-H plus their out-of-pocket expenses is about $1.1 billion annually.

Earlier this year, President Bush announced a national initiative to actively engage youth in service activities in their local communities. For 75 years now, the 4-H Program has worked to do just that in an effort to make the best better. I have no doubt that 4-H will continue to do so for the next 75 years.

SUPPORT OF MEDICARE/MEDICAID BUDGET RECONCILIATION

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, we are considering many worthwhile and necessary changes in Medicare and Medicaid in the budget reconciliation bill. I am supportive of many of these changes, but for brevity's sake I will not mention all of them.

PHYSICIAN PAYMENT REFORM

I would however like to mention my support of the reform of physician payments. It is high time that we instill logic and reason into the way in which we reimburse physicians under Medicare. The proposals in the bill begin this process by compensating doctors on the basis of the work performed, including their time, mental and physical effort, judgment, and technical skill. The legislation before us would phase the relative value fee schedule in over 4 years giving Congress ample time to correct problems that arise and preventing specialty groups that stand to lose under RVS from losing too much in any one year. More importantly, this legislation will begin to address inequities in our reimbursement system that exist between urban and rural areas. Primary care doctors, who most frequently serve our rural populations will now be recognized with higher reimbursements which will hopefully address the issue of access for rural populations. I am also pleased at the addition of an amendment at the subcommittee adjusting the work effort index. This amendment will help ensure that physicians will not leave rural areas to relocate in urban areas for higher reimbursement.

INFANT MORTALITY AND CHILD HEALTH LEGISLATION

I am also pleased the legislation includes Medicaid. Initiatives designed to reduce the effects of poverty on the health of infants and children. While the State of New Mexico has expressed concerns about increasing Medicaid Program expenditures through additional mandates, I believe it is important that we pass this legislation to help our children live productive and healthy lives. It is with anguish that I must report that poverty in New Mexico has increased 24 percent over the last 8 years. Despite this, New Mexico ranks 42d among all States with respect to the total percentage of its budget that is committed to assisting our poor. Unfortunately, this has dire consequences for New Mexico's children. New Mexico ranks the lowest in providing sufficient prenatal care for our pregnant mothers. As a result, our mothers give birth to a higher percentage of low birth weight babies than the United States as a whole. This in turn gives rise to a whole host of problems including increased numbers of infants dying in the first month after birth, and increased numbers of children born with physical impairments, disability, and handicaps. The quality of life for these children is greatly reduced and in the long run New Mexico will spend a greater percentage of its budget trying to atone for harm that could have been prevented with the simple commitment of genuine resources to providing health care for our children. The infant mortality and child health initiative will phase in mandatory coverage of pregnant women and infants up to 185 percent of poverty by July 1993 and phase in mandatory coverage of children below the poverty level.

FRAIL ELDERLY LEGISLATION

This year, budget reconciliation will also include frail elderly legislation allowing States to offer community care to the functionally disabled elderly at their option. This legislation covers both those that are physically impaired and those that are mentally impaired in performing at least two activities of daily living. There was initially some question as to whether the mentally ill would be included in this legislation. I am thus greatly pleased that mentally ill individuals are included in the revised draft of this legislation. To have excluded the mentally ill would have set a precedence for their exclusion in future legislation. More importantly, the problems of the mentally ill have been ignored for far too long by the Federal Government. Now is the time to right this inequity.

HOSPICE COVERAGE

I am also pleased that hospice care language has been included with provisions correcting a problem that exists for New Mexico hospice programs as well as for hospice programs in some other States. Specifically, the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 [COBRE] made hospice available to Medicaid beneficiaries living in nursing homes who are also eligible for Medicare. To ensure that hospice would retain professional and financial responsibility and to avoid duplicative payment for overlapping hospice and nursing home duties such as room and board, Congress established a unified payment rate. HCFA has yet to develop rules for the implementation of this provision. As a result, States like New Mexico have attempted to implement the COBRE provisions of 1987 without guidance and in some cases have inadvertently reimbursed in such a way as to discourage nursing homes from contracting with hospice. This provision will insure that terminally ill Medicaid patients may also have the benefit of palliative hospice care in their last days of life.

SOVIET SPACE LASERS AT SARY SHAGAN

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of my colleagues to recent correspondence I have had with the Department of Defense on the Soviet space laser site at Sary Shagan in Kazakhstan.

A July 31, 1989 article in the Christian Science Monitor by Mr. Stephen Green raised a number of questions about the manner in which the Pentagon has portrayed the threat posed to the United States by the Sary Shagan lasers. In a letter on August 3, 1989, I asked the Pentagon to address the issues raised in this article.

The article and the correspondence follow:

[From the Christian Science Monitor, July 31, 1989]

QUESTIONING PENTAGON AUTHORITY

(By Stephen Green)

Remember those bumper stickers you used to see on old Volvos and Volkswagens at the end of the Vietnam war—the one that said simply, "Question Authority?"

The Defense Department has been providing many innovative and expensive reasons to remember and follow this maximum, but none are as clear as The Great Soviet Laser Hoax.

Since the first year of the Reagan administration, the Department of Defense (DOD) has annually issued a pamphlet titled Soviet Military Power (SMP), which hypes Soviet weapons systems in order to justify greater US weapons spending. SMP features lurid depictions of secret research and development of Soviet space weapons at isolated sites in Russian. The most intriguing is the huge space laser at Sary Shagan in Kazakhstan.

Soviet Military Power described the laser threat as "by far the largest in the world," and "three to five times the US level of effort.

"By the late 1980's said DOD, "the Soviets could have prototypes for ground-based lasers." Even now they "have two ground-based test lasers" for use against satellites.

In the 1985 edition of SMP the Soviets had over 10,000 scientists working on laser developments, over a half dozen R&D facilities and test ranges. The most important of these was the anti-ballistic missile and directed-energy test site at Sary Shagan. The lasers there could (in 1985) "interfere" with US satellites, and could be deployed by the late 1980s. SMP now referred to this weapon as "the strategic defense laser."

The 1986 SMP focused directly on Sary Shagan lasers: "Facilities there are estimated to leave several lasers for air defense, lasers capable of damaging some components of satellites in orbit," and ballistic missiles defense lasers. SMP also said the USSR "has ground-based lasers" with a limited ability to attack satellites.

The 1987 SMP signed by Caspar Weinberger described Soviet antisatellite lasers in similar language. To provide guidance for congressmen wondering how to meet this threat, Weinberger added: "The Soviet laser weapons program would cost roughly $1 billion a year in the U.S."

What Weinberger and others in DOD did not predict was that in July 1989 a team of American weapons scientist and congressmen, including a member of the House Armed Services Committee, would be given a five-hour tour of the Sary Shagan facility.

The Soviet Academy of Sciences arranged for a Sary Shagan visit a group chosen by the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) in Washington, D.C. They allowed photographs, and videotapes.

A Pentagon spokesman has confirmed to me and to NRDC scientist Tom Cocharan that the facility, buildings, and lasers they saw at Sary Shagan were the same reported on in Soviet Military Power since 1982.

What did they find? Well, one of the lasers was a tabletop device, an array of ruby lasers with an output of 100 watts. The other was a carbon dioxide, infrared laser with an output of 20 kilowatts, of which only one or two kilowatts went into the laser beam.

At a news conference after they returned, the US scientists indicated that a laser at White Sands in New Mexico has an output 1,000 times greater than the largest at Sary Shagan, and is itself too small to down a satellite. Moreover, the computer at Sary Shagan was a aged, 1960s model—to slow to track satellites, let alone an incoming ballistic missle. The Soviet technicians at Sary Shagan assured the US team, convincingly, that they had never successfully tracked a satellite. But they were working on it.

Frank von Hippel, a Princeton physicist, says that a two-year college in America could produce the same laser. John Pike of the Federation of American Scientists, concluded that the "laser gap" of the 1980s was in fact a gap in America's favor. Tom Cochran surmises that the facility was at one time engaged in anti-ballistic missile research, but was abandoned or fell into disrepair in the early 1970s.

The Pentagon might have shown embarrassment or contrition at having been caught in a distortion of truth. But no. There is, it seems, a valid reason for the inconsistency between what Soviet Military Power described all those years and what the US scientists found at Sary Shagan.

The Soviet laser could indeed damage sensors at the back of a telescope in a US spy satellite, the defense spokesman explained, if it were focused at the exact time the laser was tracking the satellite . . . if the laser could track satellites, that is. The satellite's telescope would be looking down the laser beam. Some attack. Some anti-satellite capability. Some threat.

Things began to change when Frank Carlucci took over. Suddenly, US and Soviet military lasers were "generally comparable," and in advanced laser weapons concepts such as free-election lasers the Soviets were "slightly behind."

The disinformation was larceny—the diversion of funds from other public needs to fund a laser project to meet a threat that wasn't there. How much of the rest of Soviet Military Power was smoke and mirrors?

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, August 3, 1989.

Hon. DICK CHENEY,
Secretary of Defense,
Department of Defense,
The Pentagon.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I write to you concerning the attached article, "Questioning Pentagon Authority," by Mr. Stephen Green that appeared in The Christian Science Monitor on July 31, 1989. I would welcome your comments in general with respect to the article as well as your specific answers to the following questions:

Do you share the judgment of a team of American weapons scientists and congressmen that visited Sary Shagan in July 1989, that "a laser at White Sands in New Mexico has an output 1,000 times greater than the largest at Sary Shagan, and is itself too small to down a satellite"?

Do you share the judgment of this team that "the computer at Sary Shagan was an aged, 1960s model—to slow to track satelites, let alone an incoming ballistic missile"?

Why did the US change its assessment from an earlier description in Soviet Military Power of the Soviet laser (as quoted by Mr. Green) as "by far the largest in the world," and "three to five times the US effort," to an assessment under Defense Secretary Carlucci that US and Soviet military lasers are "generally comparable," and in advanced laser weapons concepts such as free electron lasers the Soviets were "slightly behind"?

In the aftermath of this visit to Sary Shagan, what is your judgment of the overall capabilities of the Soviet laser program and its capabilities in comparison with those of the US?

What space objects can Soviet lasers track, and what are they able to attack?

What is your judgment of the resources the Soviets are devoting to this military laser effort today?

Are there wide discrepancies in our present assessment of the Soviet laser program in comparison with our assessment of the early 1980s?

If so, why?

Is our intelligence about the Soviet military laser program much better today than it was in the early 1980s?

Your prompt answers to these questions is much appreciated, and I look forward to your early reply.

With best regards,

Sincerely yours,

LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East.

OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, DC, September 18, 1989.

Hon. LEE H. HAMILTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East, Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN. Earlier we had provided a response to your queries and request for comments on the subject of the article by Stephen Green titled "Questioning Pentagon Authority" and published in the July 31, 1989, issue of The Christian Science Monitor. Your office has further requested a totally unclassified version of the response. This is attached.

Our comments remain the same. The article reflects some apparent misconceptions which arose after the visit to Sary Shagan by a group of Congressmen, journalists and others. The group visited parts of one of the several laser facilities at Sary Shagan. They were shown laser projects which involved relatively low power laser technology. Intelligence analyses indicate that other sites within Sary Shagan and other locations within the Soviet Union contain laser facilities which are much more advanced and which include high energy laser systems. Other facilities within the large Sary Shagan test range currently are assessed by the Intelligence Community to include possible laser anti-satellite [ASAT] capabilities, but were not included in the group's visit.

Little of the previous response was required to be changed. I hope this version will be useful to you.

Sincerely,

CHARLES A. HAWKINS, Jr.,
Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense (Intelligence).

ATTACHMENT

Question. Do you share the judgment of a team of American weapons scientists and congressmen that visited Sary Shagan in July 1989, that "a laser at White Sands in New Mexico has an output 1,000 times greater than the largest at Sary Shagan, and is itself too small to down a satellite?"

Answer. We agree that the Mid-Infrared Chemical Laser (MIRACL) at White Sands is about 1,000 times more powerful than the claimed output of any of the lasers the US group saw at Sary Shagan. However, the Soviets have lasers which are more powerful than those shown to the group. There are Soviet lasers at least comparable in power to MIRACL. These lasers are located at various sites in the Soviet Union, including sites within Sary Shagan. As an example, on August 16, 1989, another US delegation in the Soviet Union was shown a live firing of a megawatt class laser (i.e., with power levels similar to that of MIRACL) at Troitsk, near Moscow. The Soviets admitted that this laser receives military funding and that the military remains interested in laser weapons.

As for anti-satellite capabilities, a megawatt class laser is capable of causing a significant level of damage to some satellites if the laser system is supported by the appropriate pointing and tracking equipment. The damage would most probably involve disabling solar cells, sensors or other critical subcomponents; causing the satellite to overheat and thus malfunction; or causing limited structural damage. In each case the mission of the targeted satellite could be expected to be degraded or denied.

Question. Do you share the judgment of this team that "the computer at Sary Shagan was an aged, 1960's model—too slow to track satellites, let alone an incoming ballistic missile?"

Answer. Despite what the group was shown, we do not believe current Soviet computer technology is limited to 1960's vintage models. Even if Soviet computers were limited to 1960's technology, we believe they still would have sufficient capability to enable them to engage satellites. In fact, several demanding space-related tasks were carried out during the 1960's. Early space missions and manned lunar landings used the computers then available.

Question. Why did the US change its assessment from an earlier description in Soviet Military Power of the Soviet laser effort (as quoted by Mr. Green) as "by far the largest in the world," and "three to five times the US effort," to an assessment under Defense Secretary Carlucci that US and Soviet military lasers are "generally comparable," and in advanced laser weapons concepts such as free electron lasers the Soviets were "slightly behind?"

Answer. Our assessment has not changed; the statements refer to different aspects of the Soviet program. The assessment in the earlier editions of Soviet Military Power refers to the size of the Soviet effort in this area relative to the resources then being committed by the US. The later assessment refers to the level of technology advancement. We have always judged that the overall level of Soviet high energy laser technology was roughly comparable to that of the US, even though characterized by a stronger Soviet commitment of resources to specific weapons projects. In recent years, the US has made significant progress in advanced laser concepts such as the free electron laser, much as a result of the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) program, and the US probably holds a slight lead in this area of technology.

Question. In the aftermath of this visit to Sary Shagan, what is your judgment of the overall capabilities of the Soviet laser program and its capabilities in comparison with those of the US?

What space objects can Soviet lasers track, and what are they able to attack?

What is your judgment of the resources the Soviets are devoting to this military laser effort today?

Answer. Our assessment of the Soviet program is essentially unchanged. The Soviets continue to investigate several different types of high energy lasers for a variety of military missions. We judge that they have reached the stage where they could produce prototypes for some applications. While the Soviets do not enjoy an overall lead over the US in laser and other technologies required to build high energy laser weapons, each country enjoys advantages in some of the specific types of lasers that are applicable to such weapons.

With regard to Soviet tracking and attack capabilities: The Soviets are able to track satellites and other space objects with radar and optical devices. Intelligence Community analyses indicated there are Soviet laser facilities which do present significant threats, and these include ASAT capabilities.

With regard to resources: The Soviets continue to maintain more than a half dozen major military laser test facilities as well as numerous lesser facilities or laboratory installations. In general, these facilities continue to expand. The Soviets also have devoted large amounts of manpower to this effort. In recent years, estimates of the Soviet military laser power program have indicated that the US would have to spend roughly a billion dollars per year to support a similar sized effort.

Question. Are there wide discrepancies in our present assessment of the Soviet laser program in comparison with our assessment of the early 1980's?

If so, why?

Answer. There are no major discrepancies between our present and our early 1980's assessments of this program.

Question. Is our intelligence about the Soviet military laser program much better today than it was in the early 1980's?

Answer. The Soviet policy of "glasnost" has fostered some increased degree of access as evidenced by the visits to Sary Shagan and Troitsk. However, the Soviets still deny full and open access to military programs, including laser programs.

SOVIET JEWRY AND THE START OF THE JEWISH NEW YEAR

HON. GEORGE J. HOCHBRUECKNER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today as part of the continuing congressional vigil on behalf of Soviet refuseniks.

September 30 of this year marked the beginning of the year 5750 in the Jewish calendar. According to Judaism, the following 10 days until October 9, Yom Kippur, is the period during which God decides each person's fate for the coming year: Who will live and who will die, who will be freed and who will remain captive.

This past year has shown a great increase in the level of emigration from the Soviet Union for Soviet Jews, Armenians, and Evangelical Christians. In total, over 32,500 people emigrated from the Soviet Union between January and July 1989. I know everyone here welcomes this increase. However, despite the progress that has been made, there are still many families which remain separated, and many people who have lived for too long awaiting permission to emigrate. Vladimir Raiz of Vilnius has been awaiting permission to emigrate since 1972—over 17 years. Mikhail Kazanevich of Leningrad has been refused permission to emigrate since 1973.

I hope that these refuseniks, as well as the many other people who are still awaiting permission to emigrate as they celebrate the Jewish New Year, will by this spring, when the holiday of Passover is celebrated, realize the hope they expressed last Passover—"Next Year in Jerusalem."

I thank my colleagues for their attention, and I would like to take this opportunity to wish a Shanna Tova, a good year, to my constituents and to the refuseniks in the Soviet Union.

ST. ADALBERT CHURCH OF GLEN LYON, PA, CELEBRATES CENTENNIAL

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to St. Adalbert's Church of Glen Lyon, PA, on the occasion of its centennial celebration.

St. Adalbert's was named after the 13th century bishop and martyr who converted the Poles in the north of Poland. The parish was established on a plot of land donated by the Susquehanna Coal Co. at the request of 75 Polish families. The foundation of the church was laid in 1889 under the guidance of Rev. Benuto Gramlewicz, pastor of St. Stanislaus. The cornerstone was blessed and dedicated by Bishop William O'Hara.

The first Mass was celebrated in the basement of the church by Rev. Andrew Zychowicz before construction on the rest of the building was completed.

The parish grew rapidly in the next two decades as the number of immigrants looking for work in the coal mines increased. In 1909, St. Adalbert's faced its first major setback when fire destroyed the church; however, showing the indomitable spirit of the parish, the church was rebuilt to its present state in 1914.

In 1938, Msgr. John J. Podkul was appointed pastor. Monsignor Podkul was instrumental in establishing the Catholic League for Religious Assistance to Poland.

Through the years St. Adalbert's has undergone many changes. During the tenure of Rev. Theopilus Wroblewski both a chapel and a new rectory were constructed. Under the current leadership of Rev. Edward Masakowski, St. Adalbert's has had extensive renovations in preparation for its centennial. The altars, ceiling murals, marble columns, and the beautiful grotto of Lourdes have all been painstakingly restored to their original splendor.

Mr. Speaker, it is with distinct pleasure that I congratulate the St. Adalbert's parish community on their 100th anniversary. Their dedication and generosity stand as an example to us all.

TRIBUTE TO DR. THOMAS H. BREWER, SR.

HON. RICHARD RAY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. Thomas H. Brewer, Sr., of Columbus, GA. Dr. Brewer was a leader in Columbus' march toward desegregation and was shot to death in 1956 for these views.

Thomas Brewer was born in Pike County, AL, and attended high school and college in Selma. He received his medical degree from McHarry Medical College in Nashville. Dr. Brewer brought his medical practice to Columbus in 1920.

Dr. Brewer was an excellent doctor and was respected throughout the black and white communities. However, he may have performed his most important work outside of his medical practice. He became a champion for blacks in Columbus and all of Georgia.

Dr. Brewer helped in the establishment of the Colored Columbus Medical Association, the SOC–C–25 Club, the local chapter of the NAACP, the Manly Taylor Recreation Center, and the Fourth Street Library. Dr. Brewer was also instrumental in the Primus King case which allowed blacks to vote in the Democratic primary, served as a delegate to the National Republican Convention, helped get the first four blacks on the Columbus Police Department, and was named Columbus' Negro of the Year. Additionally, he served as president of the alumni association of Selma University and as member of the McHarry Medical College.

Dr. Brewer led the way in the fight to end segregation in the Columbus area. Sadly, he had to give his life for this cause. However, his work in life is remembered as being a vital part of Columbus' growth as a city.

INTRODUCTION OF PRESIDENT'S CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM BILL

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the President's comprehensive campaign finance reform bill. This significant piece of legislation demonstrates to this Congress the President's commitment and dedication to campaign reform.

I welcome the President's package and welcome his participation in the debate on this important topic of the day. The President's strong desire to enact campaign reform puts the debate on a higher plain and greatly enhances the possibility of passage in this Congress.

As you know, the House Republican Conference has endorsed a sweeping package of campaign reform proposals. The submission of the President's proposal widens the parameters of debate and brings the executive branch to the negotiating table. Welcome, Mr. President, and let us all rededicate ouselves to reforming campaign practices.

THE CATASTROPHIC HEALTH INSURANCE ACT AND BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT

HON. JOSEPH D. EARLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. EARLY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I voted against the repeal by this House of the Catastrophic Health Insurance Act because I believe that in the long run, this is a step in the wrong direction. In fact, I believe that this repeal has promise of being a catastrophe of mammoth proportions. I vigorously oppose the action which the House has taken, and I grieve over what I feel will be devastating long-range effects of what we have done. I am convinced that we could have taken the current law and found innovative ways to adjust the premiums which our elders would have been required to pay. I am further convinced that when the majority of seniors realize that the House has repealed critical catastrophic benefits, they will be horrified and will be gravely disappointed in us, their Representatives.

When the Catastrophic Health Insurance Act was signed into law 15 months ago, it was hailed as a major accomplishment in social policy. It was designed to protect our elderly citizens from the spiraling costs of catastrophic illness. It filled gaps in the Medicare Program which had allowed our neediest seniors to fall through the cracks of our health care system. This creative bill, crafted, nurtured, and championed by the late Honorable Claude Pepper, responded to the outcry of our seniors about out-of-pocket medical costs. By an overwhelming margin, we voted to address the medical vulnerability of millions of elderly citizens.

And now, we have reversed that noble action. We allowed the most affluent of our seniors to pressure us into turning away from 20 million elders who needed these benefits most desperately. Let us be clear on precisely what we have done. By repeal action, we have eliminated the following provisions from the law:

Unlimited hospitalization benefits;

Vitally-needed help in paying for prescription drugs;

Mammogram coverage which promotes early detection of breast cancer;

A cap on out-of-pocket payments for doctors' bills;

Improved coverage for nursing home care which is critical for our expanding aging population;

Improved benefits for those needing skilled care in the home; and Expanded hospice benefits to help those with terminal illnesses to die surrounded by loving caretakers.

Our retreat on catastrophic health care benefits leaves unresolved a number of burning questions. How are our elderly going to pay for long-term health care? How are 37 million in the United States who have no health insurance at all going to manage? When will we in the House muster enough courage to tackle, once again, the issue of expansion or revision of Medicare benefits?

And, is health care benefit policy and tax policy always to be established under the influence of those who are organized enough and vocal enough to push us in their direction? The small minority of elderly citizens who would have paid the surtax outshouted the impoverished and less wealthy middle-income elders who are the real losers in this retreat.

I strongly supported the Catastrophic Health Insurance Act at time of passage, and I stand by that vote as a responsible and compassionate act. I strenuously denounce the repeal of this act. When an elderly American looks with shock at a noncapped doctor's bill, you and I are accountable. When nursing home care drives a middle-income family to financial ruin, you and I share responsibility for their crisis. Indeed, we shall face the repercussions of this repeal action for many years to come.

I voted against the Rostenkowski-Gephardt-Stenholm amendment to the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 (H.R. 3299). The amendment contained a very major step toward tax equity in the United States. It eliminated the so-called bubble which is found in the current Federal tax laws. The "bubble," as it exists today, results in a situation in which those Americans at the very highest income levels, some of whom make well in excess of $1 million per year, actually pay a 5-percent lower income tax rate than do Americans earning much lower annual incomes. When the tax rate reduces as the taxpayer's income rises, something is very wrong. This aspect of the Rostenkowski-Gephardt-Stenholm amendment would not only have been a step in the direction of fairness and common sense, it would also have reduced the Federal deficit by some $19.1 billion over the upcoming 3 fiscal years and some $38.8 billion over the upcoming 5 fiscal years. Given the opportunity to vote for this change alone, I would have wholeheartedly supported it. Given the opportunity to vote alone on the issue of capital gains taxation, I would have voted against the change recommended in the committee report. If the Reconciliation Act, as finally enacted, contained provisions consistent with my view of each of these issues, we would have seen a projected reduction of $40.3 billion in the amount of the Federal deficit over the upcoming 5 years.

The problem with the amendment was that it ended up in a form in which other provisions, such as the tax benefits provided for timber operators and the treatment of IRA's, effectively spent most of the funds saved by the desirable portions of the amendment. The amendment, in total, was far too close to the "tax and spend" stereotype which has plagued the Democratic Party over recent years.

A large portion of the press has pictured the vote on the Rostenkowski-Gephardt-Stenholm amendment as a "single issue" vote, up or down on the capital gains tax revision contained in the committee report. It was not.

My priorities are simple. I want the Congress to make the difficult decisions which will help control the deficit and avoid across-the-board cuts. There is no doubt in my mind that we shall soon see a round of devastating across-the-board cuts as a result of the Congress' and the administration's inability to make the difficult decisions setting the priorities which would avoid such across-the-board cuts. These cuts will hurt chapter I education programs; they will hurt programs for the homeless; they will lessen our commitment to prenatal care of children; they will hurt programs of medical research; they will hurt the elderly. In short, they will hurt precisely the people and programs who should not have this budget problem solved on their backs.

The basic reason for reconciliation legislation is to reconcile, the financial budget of the Federal Government in a manner which coincides with the budget resolution. In reconciliation the Congress and the administration should make the difficult, but necessary, decisions which result in a real world budget which lives within the Gramm-Rudman budget law. If we fail to make these hard decisions, setting priorities, the result is the across-the-board cuts. These are cuts which will often affect those least able to cope with their financial repercussions. As sure as the Sun rose yesterday, we are heading down the road toward across-the-board cuts.

The Reconciliation Act which the House is considering is a terrible piece of proposed legislation. The bill not only avoids doing what needs to be done—it goes out of its' way to do things which should rightfully be avoided.

Pasted onto this financial bill, like a patchwork of mismatched pieces of wallpaper, are a myriad of de facto pieces of legislation which have no place in this budget bill. Let me state a few examples:

First, we have seen a lengthy debate and rollcall vote in the House on a piece of regulatory legislation related to private pension funds while the House considered the Reconciliation Act. This debate dealt with the issue of whether or not single employer, private pension fund trusts, should be required, by Federal law, to have labor trustees along with management trustees. Now this is an important issue and one on which there is vigorous, good-faith debate and disagreement. This is not, however, an issue which should find itself wrapped up in a Federal budget bill. The reality is that there is little or no measurable effect on the Federal budget or the level of the Federal deficit from the actions of the House—either way—on this issue. Why is this item, which should be a separate piece of legislation, debated deliberately and voted upon alone, tied to the reconciliation bill?

Second, another de facto piece of substantive legislation added to the Reconciliation Act is the question of the so-called fairness doctrine of the Federal Communications Commission. The fairness doctrine is a matter related narrowly to the manner in which the Federal Communications Commission regulates the holders of private radio and television station broadcast licenses. Again, the issue is important and there is genuine disagreement among people of good faith as to how we should deal with it. Again, however, the actions of Congress—either way—on the fairness doctrine will have no direct effect on the size of the Federal budget or the Federal deficit.

I could list other such items. The point is that these items should not be appended to the reconciliation bill. The manner in which we are considering this bill requires Members of the House to trade off, in an entirely inappropriate fashion, their views on essentially unrelated pieces of substantive legislation. How should a Member vote who, in the final analysis, agrees with the fairness doctrine provisions of the reconciliation bill, but who disagrees with the provisions related to the private pension plans? Should such a Member, in effect, trade off his dissatisfaction with the pension plan provisions, to see de facto enactment of the FCC fairness doctrine provision with which he or she might agree? What about another Member who happens to disagree with the fairness doctrine provisions of the Reconciliation Act, but who happens to agree with the pension plan regulatory provisions? Should that Member trade off his or her beliefs as to the fairness doctrine, as the price of seeing de facto enactment of the pension plan regulatory provisions? I think that answer is obvious. We should not append a myriad of unrelated, substantive legislative issues to a budget reconciliation bill, thereby compelling Members to vote yea or nay in a single bill to an irrational grouping of unrelated, but important, legislative issues, some of which they may agree with and some of which they may disagree with.

It is all the more offensive to see a Budget Reconciliation Act loaded up with a potpourri of unrelated legislative acts, when that same Budget Reconciliation Act fails so clearly at the purpose of a budget reconciliation act—that of reconciling Federal revenues and expenditures in a fashion which would avoid the use of the across-the-board budget device which is coming.

I call upon our Members and our leaders to get about the difficult, but so very important issue, of dealing with the Federal deficit. Stop peddling the public these "snake oil solutions." Make the difficult decisions on the budget which will start us back on the road to fiscal sanity. If we continue to travel the current path, we shall be rightfully remembered by our children and our grandchildren as the generation which began to financially dismantle the foundation on which our free enterprise economy has been based for more than 200 years. Surely we can, and hopefully, we have the will to, leave a better legacy than that.

REPUBLIC OF CHINA ON TAIWAN'S 78TH NATIONAL DAY

HON. H. MARTIN LANCASTER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. LANCASTER. Mr. Speaker, last year I had the opportunity to visit the Republic of China on Taiwan with several of my colleagues. I am pleased to report that Representative and Mrs. Ding recently had a successful visit to my congressional district. During their visit I learned a great deal more about the latest developments in their country and the Dings were able to see for themselves the potential for greater economic and cultural ties between Taiwan and North Carolina. Of particular interest to my constituents were our discussions of improved foreign trade, especially the prospects of Taiwan's opening their consumer markets to poultry products grown and processed in my district.

Even though Taiwan still enjoys a trade surplus with the United States, it appears that Taiwan is trying to reduce that surplus. I am informed that a "Buy American" mission from Taiwan will soon visit the United States, and hopes to purchase $4 billion worth of United States made products. The delegation will visit North Carolina and 17 other States in an effort to reduce existing trade surpluses.

On the eve of Taiwan's 78th National Day—October 10, 1989—may I extend to President Lee Teng-hui and the people of the Republic of China on Taiwan continued economic prosperity at home and abroad.

HONORING ADAMSVILLE, TN

HON. DON SUNDQUIST

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago, the National Association of Development Organizations presented an important award to the small community of Adamsville, TN. Adamsville is in my congressional district, so I want to take a moment to tell my colleagues something about this community and its citizens and what they accomplished in order to win this significant honor.

The National Association of Development Organizations does not hand out community awards lightly; out of some 500 contenders, only 35 were selected. Adamsville, TN, a town of perhaps 1,500 people, is in proud and select company.

The national association singled out Adamsville for community involvement, and for its commitment to better education. It recognized Adamsville's aggressive planning effort for schools and park development; for its community festival; for the dedication of a museum honoring the late McNairy County sheriff and Adamsville Police Chief Buford Pusser—many of you have heard of Buford Pusser, he was the no-nonsense law-and-order sheriff whose career was brought to the screen in the "Walking Tall" movies.

That's not all. Adamsville has built a new library, a new waste water treatment facility, and low-income housing for its elderly.

What you find in Adamsville, TN, are good, caring people, who have involved themselves in the life of their community and made it a better place. Adamsville symbolizes much of what is good about America's small communities—a sense of place, a spirit of community, a willingness to be good neighbors, and a living example of people working together for the common good.

I congratulate my friend, Mayor Harry Boosey and the many civic leaders in Adamsville whose efforts have brought Adamsville this very select honor and this special place among America's communities. I hope this House will join me in extending congratulations and greetings.

OPRY QUEEN DIES, BUT HER MEMORY LIVES ON

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a lady who was known as the "Queen of the Ivories" for her distinctive instrumental stylings as a piano player, country music performer, and longtime member of the "Grand Old Opry" in Nashville.

Del Wood passed away on Tuesday, October 3, 1989, but the memory of her music and the contributions she made to country music live on.

Del was a personal friend of mine and a mother figure to many of the younger performers on the "Grand Old Opry." She will be sorely missed.

In tribute to Del, I'd like to submit for the RECORD a copy of an excellent newspaper article by Robert K. Oermann from the October 3, 1989, edition of the Nashville Tennessean. The article outlines Del Wood's contributions to the industry and I urge my colleagues to examine the article and join me in tribute to a great talent.

OPRY'S "QUEEN OF THE IVORIES" DIES

(By Robert K. Oermann)

Grand Ole Opry star Del Wood, known as "The Queen of the Ivories," died yesterday evening at Baptist Hospital.

The widely-loved, 69 year-old keyboardist suffered a stroke last Wednesday, Sept. 27, while preparing for the "Legendary Ladies Country Music" show at The Station Inn that night.

Her sister Emily Burge found her unconscious when she went to pick her up for the concert. Ms. Wood never regained consciousness, according to Nashville journalist and family friend Pat Harris.

Del Wood is the only million-selling female solo instrumentalist in music history. Her rollicking piano rendition of Down Yonder became a pop and country smash in 1951.

Born Polly Adelaide Hendricks Feb. 22, 1920, Ms. Wood was one of the few country music stars who are Nashville natives. Her family farm was located near the present I-65/Trinty Lane interchange, and she could trace her ancestry in Middle Tennessee to back before the Civil War—her great-grandfather owned a tobacco store at 6th and Charlotte downtown that was raided by Union troops.

The famed pianist worked for the Public Health Department prior to her music stardom. She also worked for a time at a five-and-dime, playing sheet music for customers. Ms. Wood mainly pursued her musical aspirations at night and on weekends in the late 1940s.

During one weekend stint her distinctive style caught the ear of radio DJ Jim McKinney, who helped her join a recording group called Hugh "Baby" Jarrett and His Dixieliners. Jarrett was also a member of the famed Jordanaires vocal group. As a Dixieliner, Ms. Wood played on a jazzy version of Lefty Frizzeil's big 1950 hit If you've Got the Money, I've Got the Time. This led to a solo recording offer.

She originally chose L. Wolfe Gilbert's old ministrel tune Down Yonder as the flip side of her recording of Mine All Mine. To her surprise, the oldie became a big pop hit, one of Nashville's earliest million-selling records.

In a 1988 Tennessean interview she said that her signature tune, "liberated me from the typewriter keys to the '88s."

In the early 1950s she toured with such pop celebrities as Tony Bennett, Guy Mitchell and The Four Aces.

Her stage name was calculated so that radio programmers wouldn't know she was female.

"Back then, women weren't accepted too well," she recalled. The ambiguous "Del" was contracted from Adelaide. The "Wood" half of her stage name came from Hazelwood, the last name of an ex-husband she referred to as "my one big mistake."

On Nov. 13, 1953 Ms. Wood was tapped to replace wild-living Moon Mullican as the resident honky-tonk piano stylist on the Grand Ole Opry. She immediately became a national radio star on the NBC-broadcast Opry segments.

She recorded prolifically throughout the 1950s and 1960s for labels such as Tennessee, RCA, Class, Deca, Lamb & Lion and Mercury. There are more than 20 Del Wood albums, and more than 60 singles bear her name. Among her other notable disc performances were Piano Roll Blues, Muskrat Ramble and Johnson Rag.

Her "barrelhouse" piano-pounding style was once cited by rockabilly wildman Jerry Lee Lewis as his chief inspiration.

"Critics have called my playing 'honky-tonk,' 'jazz-country' and 'dixiepop,' but personally do not look for labels," she said in a 1983 Tennessean interview. "It's just self-expression to me."

Ms. Wood toured internationally in the 1960s, to Vietnam, the Philippines and South Korea. As recently as 1988 she was headlining in Australia.

Behind the scenes, Ms. Wood was a longtime union activist. She was a board member of the Nashville chapter of AFTRA (American Federation of Television & Radio Artists) and was also active in the American Federation of Musicians.

She was the only woman to have served on the AFM board. She tirelessly championed the cause of her fellow Opry stars to the show's management.

She was also active in ROPE (Reunion of Professional Entertainers), the organization that aims to build a retirement home for country performers.

Ms. Wood was one of the Opry cast's most amusing story-tellers and a "mother hen" to many younger performers on the show.

Survivors include son Wesley Hazelwood and daughter-in-law Leslie, and sisters Emily Burge and Margaret Hamilton, all of Nashville.

Funeral arrangements were incomplete last night.

TRIBUTE TO MALCOM RANDALL

HON. MICHAEL BILIRAKIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with my colleagues the tremendous achievements of Mr. Malcom Randall who is the Director of the VA Medical Center in Gainesville and the Director of Medical District 12. Malcom will be honored this evening as "Mr. VA U.S.A." by the Marion County Veterans Council in Ocala, FL.

The State of Florida and her 1.5 million veterans are honored to have such a diligent, trustworthy veteran such as Malcom Randall in the public service. His 40 years of service to veterans is an incredible achievement matched by few.

During my last four terms in Congress as a member of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Malcom has frequently offered his formidable knowledge in veterans matters to the committee. He has worked diligently for funding of VA facilities which are so desperately needed in the State of Florida.

Malcom Randall's countless achievements have not gone unnoticed by his peers. He has received the two highest awards conveyed by the Department of Veterans Affairs; the Meritorious Service Award in 1984 and the Exceptional Service Award in 1985. In addition, President Ronald Reagan awarded Malcom the Presidential Rank Award in 1984 which is given only to a select few senior Federal executives.

I wish Malcom Randall continued health and success in all of his endeavors. I am certain that I speak for all of Florida's 1.5 million veterans in thanking him for his unyielding commitment to veterans.

COMPLEXITY OF FIGHTING THE NARCOTICS WAR

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week my colleague and friend, BEN GILMAN, addressed a group of medical professionals at the national naval hospital in Bethesda, MD. The topic was the complexity of the drug war. He discussed the origins of our current drug epidemic and outlined some of the challenges we will face in the future in combating this scourge. I am inserting, at this point in the RECORD, the full text of his remarks for my colleagues attention:

COMPLEXITY OF FIGHTING THE NARCOTICS WAR

(Remarks by Rep. Benjamin A. Gilman)

INTRODUCTION

I am delighted to be here at the Bethesda Naval Hospital this morning to discuss the narcotics issue. For more than a decade I have served on the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, the only congressional committee dedicated full time to examining all aspects of the drug problem. I am also a senior member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the cochairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee Narcotics Task Force. Fighting drugs has been my top priority since coming to the Congress in 1972.

DEFINING THE PROBLEM

There is no greater challenge facing our Nation nor more difficult nor more complex than combating drugs. President Reagan, in 1982, accurately labeled drugs a national security threat to our Nation.

The "drug problem" is a composite of a number of inter-related problems, including foreign drug production, drug trafficking, domestic drug abuse, drug-related crime and violence and drug-related health problems. All these issues must be attacked simultaneously on every level if we are truly to make progress. That means attacking the problems of: (1) drug crop eradication; (2) interdiction; (3) local law enforcement; (4) education and prevention; and, (5) treatment and rehabilitation.

We are often questioned if the drug crisis is primarily a supply problem or a demand problem. I do not believe it is possible to separate the issues. Supply helps create demand, and demand certainly leads to increased supply. For example, the Soviet Union never had a major heroin problem until its soldiers had access to that deadly drug while occupying Afghanistan. Now, after years of benign neglect on the drug issue, the Soviets have a serious drug abuse problem and are anxious to cooperate with us in fighting drugs. Similarly, one of the groups with the highest ratios of drug use is medical professionals—mostly due to easy access to drugs. Readily available supplies certainly leads to increased consumption. Producing countries inevitably become consuming countries, suggestions that we focus solely on demand reduction are misguided.

On the other hand, reducing demand, must be a fundamental part of our anti-drug effort. I firmly believe that anti-drug education efforts in our schools, starting at an early age, as early as elementary levels, can help to discourage young Americans from trying illicit drugs. Drug treatment, to get those already addicted to drugs to break the habit, is not only humane, but since each drug addict tends to breed additional addicts, it will help supress demand.

HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE

Let me briefly outline the development of our current drug problem. Momentarily, we are focusing primarily on cocaine, but back in the early 1970's cocaine was not a substantial problem and crack was just an idea in some chemist's mind. We were still in the traumatic Vietnam years when drug use, mostly LSD and marijuana, was considered by certain segments of the day's youth as something of a protest statement.

At that time our Nation's policy makers were focusing primarily on combatting heroin produced in Asia and marijuana grown domestically, in Mexico, South America, and in a number of other places. In this drug war we had some success. Asian production was dampened through the dismantling of large trafficking organizations and Mexico implemented a successful paraquat spraying program which slashed their marijuana production.

Unfortunately, events took a turn for the worse in the late 1970's and early 1980's. Organizations and trafficking routes which had been trafficking marijuana from Latin America shifted to cocaine trafficking. The United States was especially vulnerable to a cocaine epidemic because a number of so called experts had denied that cocaine was a dangerous or addictive substance. Furthermore, for certain high-profile groups in our country, cocaine became a new status symbol and was made part of their "trendy night-life."

Once cocaine became widely available in this country it was only a matter of time before the death and tragedy which it brings began to be appreciated by many Americans. The introduction of crack, processed, smokable cocaine dramatically accelerated this trend. The key event in changing our nation's attitude towards cocaine occurred in 1986 with the tragic crack overdose death of college basketball star, Len Bias. He was a young man, in top physical condition, who had just been picked by the Boston Celtics as their top draft choice. He celebrated this personal triumph by consuming crack, paying for this tragic mistake with his life.

WHAT HAS BEEN OUR LEGISLATIVE RESPONSE TO THE DRUG EPIDEMIC?

Our Nation was shocked and outraged by the death of Bias and the subsequent death, one week later, of a professional football player. That frustration encouraged the Congress to enact the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986 which increased our annual drug budget from just over $2 billion in fiscal year 1986 to over $4 billion in fiscal year 1987, toughened penalties for drug offenses, and created many new anti-drug programs, including grants to State and local law enforcement. The 1986 Anti-Drug Act was followed by a second omnibus drug bill in 1988, which created a new agency to coordinate our Nation's entire anti-drug effort, the Office of National Drug Control Policy, currently headed by its director William Bennett.

The legislation which created the "drug czar's" office required the submission to Congress of a comprehensive coordinated, national drug strategy. The announcement on September 5th by President Bush of the new drug strategy signaled a new Federal commitment to the war against drugs. The plan called for substantial funding increases, for the first time fully recognized the Federal Government's responsibilities on the demand side, and launched a new Andean initiative to help Colombia, Peru and Bolivia combat the illicit production and trafficking of drugs.

The Senate this week added nearly $1 billion to the President's budget recommendations, for a total proposed fiscal year 1990 drug budget of $9.4 billion. I believe even more is needed, but considering that this amount is more than four times the 1986 budget, we are making good progress.

DRUG LEGALIZATION: A BAD IDEA

I would like to discuss some other especially pertinent narcotics issues which are of great concern to me. I am continually disappointed when prominent individuals call for the legalization of illicit drugs. I appreciate that their motives are good, but as our select committee's two-day hearing on the subject indicated, there can be no such thing as a workable, positive legislation policy.

For legalization to have any impact on drug-related crime and violence an inexhaustible supply of the most potent drugs must be made cheaply and easily available to all who want them. Otherwise, unsatisfied drug addicts would seek additional drugs on the street, a new blackmarket would develop, and the hoped for decline in drug-related crime and violence would not materialize.

Our Government would have to set up 24-hour "drug stores" with drive-thru windows to distribute deadly drugs like crack, heroin and PCP. Some drug users might quietly go home to smoke their one rock of Government crack, but many others would keep coming back for more. More than a few drug addicts would consume their favorite drugs until they killed themselves.

Furthermore, removing legal and moral sanctions against drug consumption will encourage more people to try drugs and would inevitably create more drug abusers and more drug addicts. Ultimately, any legalization policy enacted would be a tragic failure and would have to be reversed. It may sound logical on paper, but in practice legalization would be a disaster. We must avoid "quick fix" solutions like legalization which will only make a severe problem even worse.

THE ANDES: FIGHTING DRUGS AT THE SOURCE

Another great concern of mine pertains to the drug situation in the Andes. The Colombians have long suffered greatly at the hands of the cocaine cartels. The Colombian drug traffickers have murdered over 200 judges, 11 Supreme Court judges, a Minister of Justice, an Attorney General and numerous public officials, journalists, law enforcement officers and civilians in a continuing campaign of terror. However, when the cartels assassinated the popular Presidential candidate, Juan Carolos Galan, they went too far. The Colombian people and the Government, led by President Virigilio Barco, were so outraged that a widespread and severe counterattack against the traffickers was implemented.

In recent weeks the Colombian authorities have rounded up over 12,000 drug suspects, seized millions of dollars worth of property and assets belonging to the drug traffickers, and have aggressively gone after Colombian cocaine processing labs and clandestine airstrips. Perhaps most importantly, on August 19, 1989, President Barco issued an executive decree which effectively revived extradition by taking the Colombian judiciary out of the extradition decision making process. Already a major Colombian money launderer, Eduardo Martinez Romero, has been extradited to the United States for prosecution.

The United States has already provided Colombia with $65 million worth of emergency military equipment to help them combat the drug traffickers, as well as $2 million to help protect judges. More assistance will follow later this fiscal year as part of the President's $2 billion, 5-year Andean assistance package.

In the past there have been other crackdowns on traffickers and other waves of mass arrests in Colombia. This time, however, I believe that the anti-drug effort will be more effectively sustained. The United States and other nations have come to fully recognize the tragic impact of drug trafficking and are now prepared to take needed actions to help our besieged ally.

In Peru and Bolivia a policy of disrupting trafficker activities is being implemented. Such a policy offers great hope because the vast majority of global coca production is found in just a few huge growing regions in the Andes (the upper Huallaga Valley in Peru and in the Chapare and the Yungas in Bolivia). The coca leaf is usually processed into coca paste and base near the growing areas and then flown out, primarily to Colombia, for further processing into cocaine hydrochloride (HCL). Much of the cocaine is then trafficked, in various ways, into the United States.

The Drug Enforcement Administration, working closely with foreign law enforcement officials, are working in "Operation Snowcap," to destroy coca paste and base labs and clandestine airstrips in Peru and Bolivia. Complementing Operation Snowcap is a program to prevent the export into coca growing regions of essential precursor chemicals used in cocaine production. Many of these chemicals, including ether and acetone, are produced in the United States.

If the anti-narcotics forces can destroy a sufficient percentage of drug labs and air strips and prevent the transportation of chemicals to the processing sites, the traffickers will not be able to process their coca or get it out of the growing regions. The amount of coca grown will become virtually irrelevant. Hundreds of tons of coca will pile up and rot and the local coca farmers will be unable to find a buyer for their illicit product.

Too many pundits and politicians mistakenly insist that supply reduction is a mission impossible, or that the only way to achieve supply reduction is through drug crop eradication. Eradication, at least until cocaine producing nations are prepared to launch a massive aerial herbicidal program, has only a limited value. In contrast, disruption efforts offer great hope.

Of course, cocaine is not our only problem. Heroin production is on the rise, and the use of methamphetamines is increasing along with other synthetic illicit drugs. Nonetheless, due to the addictive power of cocaine, I believe it makes good sense to make every effort to prevent it from reaching our communities.

CONCLUSION: HOPE FOR THE FUTURE

In conclusion, let me say that as severe and as multi-faceted as our drug problem is, we should not and must not become discouraged. We have seen in the past, that we can change attitudes towards drugs, we can reclaim our neighborhoods from the drug dealers, and we can find ways to limit the flow of drugs into our streets. If Federal, State, and local officials, as well as the private sector and private citizens continue to work together we can bring this epidemic under control.

In addressing this professional group, I would like to suggest that too little attention has been given to what motivates so many Americans from all sectors of our society to try dangerous illicit drugs. The root causes of addiction must be researched and understood if we hope to make long-term progress in fighting this drug epidemic.

Furthermore, with regard to treatment, efforts must be made to evolve more effective modalities of treatment and rehabilitation. The very best treatment programs run by the medical profession still have too high a recidivism rate. The military, whose anti-drug policy has proven highly successful, also has a problem with high recidivism in its treatment program. It can not be the policy of our society to give up on the millions of Americans who are addicted to drugs. For their sake, and for the sake of our country, workable, practical, and effective treatment and rehabilitation programs must be developed and made available to those in need.

A WILDERNESS REVOLUTION FOR THE 1990'S—CONGRESSMAN VENTO ADDRESSES THE FUTURE OF OUR NATION'S WILDERNESS AREAS

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 5, 1989

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, on September 12, 1989, our colleague, Representative BRUCE VENTO, gave a speech before the National Wilderness Conference in commemoration of the 25th anniversary of the Wilderness Act.

This speech is important reading for those who share Chairman VENTO's concern for the future of our Nation's federally designated wilderness areas. Since the Wilderness Act was signed into law 25 years ago, the Congress has designated over 90 million acres as wilderness areas to be protected much as they came from the hand of God.

However, we need to remember that the designation of wilderness is only the starting point, and not the finish line, in protecting these beautiful lands. As Chairman VENTO warns us in this vibrant speech, Federal wilderness areas are facing threats of degradation as a result of the low priority wilderness currently receives within our Federal land agencies, and the lack of funding by the Congress for wilderness management.

Mr. Speaker, Chairman VENTO wisely points out that the Congress must work much more closely with our public land agencies to ensure that these wilderness areas are properly managed so these beautiful lands can be enjoyed by our children, and our children's children. This indeed, would be a wilderness revolution for the 1990's.

A WILDERNESS REVOLUTION FOR THE 1990'S—COMMEMORATING THE WILDERNESS ACT ON ITS 25TH ANNIVERSARY

(Address by Congressman Bruce F. Vento)

Thank you, Regent Schertler. I appreciate your kind introduction. I asked you not to be so generous in your remarks, but how can I criticize such passionate devotion to the truth. You've always been there for me and you are here for me again today.

I also appreciate the wonderful turnout today, especially on a day to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Wilderness Act. There is certainly much to celebrate. Since the act's passage 25 years ago, the national wilderness preservation system has grown 10-fold from over 9 million acres to over 90 million, with tens of millions more yet to be designated tomorrow. Today almost every State has some designated wilderness, and wilderness has grown from a limited land designation to a major use of the national public lands. What would Arthur Carhart, Aldo Leopold, Bob Marshall and Howard Zahniser, the founders of the wilderness system, think if they were here today to see the results of their vision, their handiwork? They would surely be amazed at the magnitude of success enjoyed by the concept of wilderness they envisioned and developed. They would be pleased to note that because of their efforts the Wilderness Act became law and is now 25 years young and Americans of future generations will have a heritage of wilderness with all the scientific, economic, recreational, wildlife and spiritual benefits that wilderness resources can provide.

Certainly, I congratulate and thank the organizers of this national wilderness conference. Bringing together the Nation's wilderness managers to access and discuss management of the system of wilderness that the law designated is a fitting way to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Wilderness Act. I commend Dean Skok and the University of Minnesota, the Forest Service, the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service for joining in sponsoring this conference and for making it possible for such a distinguished gathering to take place. Also to be commended are the many cosponsors who have given this event their strong support. But we particularly owe a debt of gratitude to the conference's two co-chairs—Dick Joy of the Forest Service and Dr. David Lime of the University of Minnesota. Over a year of their sweat and toil went into making this conference. I appreciate their dedication and good work.

How can we best commemorate the Wilderness Act? True commemoration is surely more than talk. The most fitting way to commemorate this landmark legislation is through current and future actions. New dedication this week is in order to improve the quality of wilderness management in this country. By providing the national wilderness preservation system the level of management that it needs and requires, we can truly commemorate the Wilderness Act. Without such commitment, our commemoration and our celebration here today would be hollow, words without substance.

In a way, the wilderness movement has been a revolution. This revolution has its roots in the earliest history of our Nation, based on an ethos of conservation which is the life blood of values that sustains order in public land use. America as a young land had unexplored, untapped, pristine land in which a native population lived in near harmony with wilderness. This wilderness was taken for granted early in our history.

Because the Federal Government did not have the tax dollars to sustain action, its role was to expend the land for a myriad of public purposes from education, transportation and extractive industry development to homesteads. The University of Minnesota, incidentally, is a land grant institution and one of the reasons that we are here today. This policy spread the land's wealth in a haphazard manner. Well, it didn't take long for land wars to develop. Even in the so-called midst of plenty, folks found reasons to be contrary regarding land use practices and decisions. As a result, public land management agencies developed at both the national and State levels.

Wilderness was, of course, embraced by public policy relatively late in the land use classification scheme, not because it was an afterthought but rather because of the humble assumption that wilderness would always be with us—that even man in all his vain glory could not and would not have the power to destroy such a wealth of wild lands endowed to our Nation. Furthermore, policy makers believed that other conservation land designations such as national forests, national parks, wildlife refuges, and natural and scientific areas would preserve the essence of wilderness. As unfettered activities occurred, the limits and failures of such land designations became apparent and the wilderness designation was finally born—born out of protest, frustration and desperation, but with very noble intentions.

Needless to say, there has been a national evolution of all land management roles and techniques. Land management has been dynamic and has utilized new knowledge to best accomplish the implementation of policy and law effectively. Wilderness designation, however, was a revolution because it broke out of the mind-set that had tied agency land management to a specific use and purpose for and by man. This revolution said that wild lands managed as wilderness areas were to be, in perpetuity, the areas that man has not and will not affect or change. And rather than create a new land management agency, the wilderness revolution wisely recognized that all national agencies which managed lands should inventory their lands as candidates for this important new national public land designation.

Well, the wilderness revolution continues today. The wilderness system at 25 years is filling out. Wilderness is not a 98-pound weakling anymore. After 25 years of care and feeding, it is growing with new hope and new life. The process of study and nomination of lands from all land management agencies is working, strengthening and enlarging the wilderness system. With 90 million acres of wilderness lands designated and with tens of millions more awaiting congressional action, the momentum and action continue. Public support remains very strong for wilderness as more and more of our population becomes urban. Especially relevant is all the support for wilderness with its nonconsumptive purposes in the Western States which have significant amounts of national lands. The 1990's will bring additional wilderness classification at a fast pace. Right now the Forest Service, National Park Service, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Bureau of Land Management are studying over 134 million roadless acres for suitability for wilderness designation. Congress will designate many of these acres and will ask you—the land management agencies, the conservation organizations and the public—to implement the law and bring quality management to these new areas.

Each of us has a role, and these roles are changing as the wilderness system matures. My focus today won't be on the role of Congress or of conservation groups, but rather on the role of land managers. It's not an election year so I need not brag about congressional wilderness achievements. It is important that we focus today on the dilemma facing those land managers with wilderness responsibilites. Ideally everyone should love you as wilderness managers and agree with the law and the policies of your agency. I wish that were true but wishing doesn't make it so. Your job is to translate law into practice despite an often reluctant and angry constituency. This is hard and controversial work, but, as the Romans say, it is more important to be respected than loved. The controversial nature of wilderness laws and policies as well as other problems may have led some managers to be tentative in the way they implement these laws and policies. The time has come to end tentativeness in wilderness management. Now is the time for strong and aggressive wilderness management leadership.

The wilderness revolution has changed the way the American people use and view their public lands and transformed land management patterns and priorities in the United States. Surprisingly, however, this wilderness revolution has not been mirrored to date within the agencies charged with the nomination and management of the wilderness areas that the revolution created. Although wilderness today is a major land allocation, it apparently remains a low agency priority and wilderness management clearly has not kept pace with wilderness designation. Let me assure you again that wilderness designations will go forward. Even in the adverse political environment of the 1980's, significant new designations occurred, and the 1990's undoubtably will be a much better environment for wilderness designation, believe me.

Perhaps we need a new, second wilderness revolution today, a 1990's revolution inside the Federal agencies that finally changes the way they view and carry out their wilderness management responsibilities. This conference could be the opening salvo of the wilderness revolution of 1990's.

Do you question that a 1990's wilderness management revolution is necessary? Some who are put off by the lack of response by the agencies to wilderness management needs seek a separate special agency and authority to manage wilderness or else seek to change dramatically the multiple use concept calling it unworkable and filled with internal contradictions. Others question whether any change actually is needed in the way the Federal agencies manage their wilderness areas. Well, we do not need a special new agency to treat wilderness lands as being special nor do we need absolute exclusivity to overcome passivity. What we do need is proactive wilderness management to lead a wilderness management revolution in the 1990's.

Let me explain my concerns. The U.S. General Accounting Office at my request has conducted a 15-month study of Forest Service wilderness mangement. The Forest Service was not selected for special analysis or pain and suffering but for the simple reason that it historically and currently manages most of the designated wilderness areas in the lower 48 States. The GAO's final report is about to go to the printers and soon will be released to the general public. Because I feel that this GAO study can help you in your deliberations this week, I have brought along some copies of the report which I will leave with Dick Joy and Dave Lime to share with you. My hope is that this report will be viewed by the Forest Service not as an attack, but as a useful tool that it can use to strengthen its program.

To conduct its study, the GAO established a team of investigators who interviewed Forest Service wilderness employees, visited 10 wilderness areas—five in the west and five in the east—and sent a comprehensive questionnaire to every Forest Service ranger district with wilderness management responsibilities in the country. Five hundred and forty of these districts, 92 percent, responded. I hope that they don't view this as providing the ammunition for their own firing squad. Their responses were candid and positive and I appreciate that.

Several of GAO's findings cause concern:

1. The GAO found that extensive resource damage was occurring particularly on trails and around popular wilderness camping areas. The report cites numerous examples such as stock and human wastes polluting waters in the Frank Church—River of No Return Wilderness in Idaho, soil eroding into the middle fork of the Salmon River, deep gullying in the trail system of the Holy Cross Wilderness in Colorado, and excessive garbage and litter in the Pecos Wilderness of New Mexico.

2. Despite extensive degradation, the GAO reports that 61 percent of the ranger districts who filled out the questionnaire indicated that they had not prosecuted or fined a single wilderness violator in the last 4 years, and 72 percent had not determined the carrying capacities of their wilderness areas.

3. The GAO discovered that the Forest Service has no nationwide monitoring system to measure trends in the condition of the wilderness resource. Seventy six percent of the ranger districts, for example, had not implemented the limits of acceptable change method of monitoring and managing conditions or anything equivalent. According to the GAO, no wilderness condition data has been collected in the Sispey Wilderness in Alabama, the Cohutta Wilderness in Georgia, and the Shining Rock Wilderness in North Carolina, since their study and designation many years ago. As a result of this monitoring vacuum, the Forest Service has no scientific way to determine just how widespread and how rapidly degradation may be occurring in the national wilderness preservation system.

4. The GAO reports an $87 million backlog in wilderness trail maintenance and reconstruction. For example, its report states that two-thirds of the 1,000 mile trail system in the Pecos Wilderness is substandard and that 45 percent of the trail system in the Bob Marshall Wilderness in Montana needs reconstruction. Typical problems are erosion, gullying, mud, and multiple treads. In the Frank Church—River of No Return Wilderness, trail junctions often have signs of different styles and eras with contradictory information or have no signs at all. Is Congress at fault for not funding the trails program? If you don't ask, you surely won't receive. Neither the Forest Service nor the administration have asked for the necessary funds.

5. The GAO discovered that some outfitters and guides are violating Forest Service policies and the terms and conditions of their special use permits. In the Frank Church, they found elaborate outfitter cmaps with firewood cut by chain saw. In the Pecos, GAO discovered that, at least in one district, managers had no program at all to monitor outfitter performance.

6. Most Forest Service managers indicated on GAO's questionnaire that public outreach and education on wilderness regulations and good camping ethics were inadequate. Sixty nine percent of the ranger districts reported that they were educating fewer than 20 percent of their wilderness visitors. This is less than 1 visitor in 5.

7. And finally, the GAO report states that Forest Service professionals spend little time working on wilderness management issues and even less time actually in the wilderness. Most professionals with wilderness management responsibilities that the team interviewed had so many other duties assigned to them that wilderness received scant attention. One hundred and thirty ranger districts with wilderness responsibilities reported that they did not have a single employee who spent 10 percent or more of his or her time on wilderness management.

This General Accounting Office report is not the only indication of problems with the Forest Service wilderness management program. The GAO findings echo what we learned at the congressional wilderness management oversight hearings that I chaired last year. Although Congress has conducted countless hearings on wilderness designation, this was one of the only congressional hearings on how these areas are managed after they are designated. Again, the focus on the Forest Service made sense because it is the largest wilderness management agency in the lower 48 States. Testifying were a diverse group of witnesses that included Forest Service wilderness rangers, conservation organizations, wilderness users, and researchers from the Forest Service and the academic community.

There was surprising unanimity in their testimony. They all agreed that the wilderness resource is deteriorating under the Forest Service's stewardship and that, compared to its other resource programs, wilderness has a low priority. The wilderness rangers pointed out that the national forest wilderness system is run by seasonal technicians with no career ladder or job security. They indicated that there were wilderness rangers who had never been visited in the field by their supervisors. Furthermore, many of these supervisors had no previous wilderness management experience. One wilderness ranger testified that in the past 5 years she had worked for three different officials, none of whom had worked before in wilderness or recreation programs.

The university researchers substantiated the statements of the wilderness rangers with the data from scientific studies. Dr. Glen Haas of Colorado State University testified that his research shows that only one-fourth of Forest Service units with wilderness responsibilities have a full-time employee with wilderness management as his or her primary duty. Dr. Joseph Roggenbuck of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and University testified about his study of wilderness management in region 8, a large Forest Service region that stretches from Virginia to Texas. He found that although the region has 73 wilderness areas, it employs only a single, full-time wilderness ranger, a single seasonal wilderness ranger and 7 wilderness volunteers. George Leonard, associate chief of the Forest Service, was quite candid with us about these weaknesses in the wilderness program. He also testified that only one-third of national forest wilderness areas have management plans.

Surely I should not single out the Forest Service as the only agency with wilderness management problems. The other three agencies have unique problems of their own. Almost 50 percent of the national park system's total acreage is now wilderness, over 38 million acres. The National Park Service is now the biggest wilderness agency and, yet, the Park Service has no budget line item for wilderness, no wilderness management research program, no completed management plans for any of its 40 wilderness areas and not a single full-time wilderness professional in Washington or in any of its regional offices to oversee this 38.5-million-acre system. National leadership for wilderness has been assigned to a GS-13 position, many levels down in the Washington office bureaucracy, and even this position has wilderness as only one-third of its responsibilities The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has a similar inadequate organizational structure.

Because the Bureau of Land Management is just beginning its wilderness management responsibilities, it is too early to tell just how effective its program will be. However, there already is some cause for concern. Although it has only 450,000 acres of wilderness, BLM's enforcement of the provisions of the Wilderness Act in the 25 BLM areas that have been designated has been hit and miss, resulting in widespread trespass by off-road vehicles in many areas. In the Juniper Dunes wilderness in the State of Washington, for example, dune buggies roam as freely as they did before the area was designated.

The Federal agencies do not share all of the blame for the sad state of wilderness management in the country today. The national environmental and conservation organizations must share some of the responsibility. Because most of their resources have been utilized for wilderness designation battles, they have not been able to focus on wilderness management issues. Clearly the wilderness management revolution of the 1990's needs to be across the board in the Federal agencies, in the conservation community and in Congress.

I realize that all these criticisms sound tough, but the integrity of 91 million acres is at stake. And there are tens of millions more to be added. One of the most difficult aspects of this problem is that some key leaders in the Federal agencies do not yet recognize that there is a serious problem. Congressional hearings and scientific studies apparently have not made enough of an impression. Wilderness areas will not only get the management they need, once we collectively realize and agree that present programs are not doing the job. The wilderness system would be in a lot better shape today if more folks who know what the problems are were absolutely free to speak out candidly and clearly. Permitting professional land managers greater autonomy with accountability must remain in a major policy objective.

I certainly intend to continue to speak out in Congress. The Members of Congress did not spend the last 25 years of blood, sweat and tears creating a 91 million acre wilderness system, only to stand idly by while it gradually deteriorates from lack of administrative direction. We must keep in mind that the national wilderness preservation system is an irreplaceable resource of profound meaning and of vital importance to the American people. It deserves more than the leftovers, more than haphazard, off the cuff, second class management. Wilderness management cannot be permitted to evolve into the lowest common denominator.

Yesterday's faith in natural wilderness systems and their spiritual values is being enhanced today by hardcore scientific and economic values that underline and justify today's wilderness preservation system and tomorrow's expansion of it. Today more than yesterday we are beginning to realize the implicit benefits of natural ecosystems for maintaining biodiversity, protecting gene pools and strong carbon to slow global warming. As the world rapidly approaches a global environmental crisis with atmospheric change, holes in the ozone layer, ocean pollution and tropical and temperate deforestation, wilderness areas have become increasingly precious as a major contributor to the health and homeostasis or balance of our planet. Furthermore, these lands are among those that are most readily harmed. America's wilderness system benefits not just Americans, but mankind on a global basis.

You should not be satisfied until the wilderness system receives the management it merits. You should not be satisfied until our Nation's land management agencies manage wilderness as a very high priority. You must not stop fighting until the Forest Service, the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service revolutionize their approach to wilderness management.

There are signs, small but certain, that the wilderness revolution of the 1990's has begun. In this room are many dedicated Federal employees who are making significant contributions to improving wilderness management within their agencies. Because of your interest, concern and efforts, there are several recent developments that give me hope that significant and meaningful change is in the wind. Some new insights and new approaches to wilderness management can be observed. Since I singled out the Forest Service for focus and critical analysis, let me first recognize some positive signs of hope within this important agency.

1. The Forest Service has developed a plan for a national education campaign on no-trace camping.

2. The Lolo National Forest has renovated the historic Ninemile Ranger Station, making it a training center for wilderness managers.

3. The Forest Service is giving more of its wilderness rangers permanent appointments enabling the agency to keep their valuable experience and expertise.

4. Forest Service managers of the Bob Marshall complex have pioneered the limits of acceptable change management model and have implemented it throughout this vast 1½-million-acre area.

5. The chief and associate chief of the Forest Service are speaking candidly about problems in wilderness management and have given wilderness some new emphasis the past 2 years.

6. Conservation organizations, often staffed by some of the best and the brightest from our land management agencies who know their own agency's shortcomings firsthand, are in the forefront too, pushing for professionalism and integrity in land management agencies. In Montana, Bill Worf, a retired Forest Service regional director of recreation, has founded Wilderness Watch, a citizen's organization to focus on wilderness management issues. Already his group is fighting several attempts to weaken Forest Service wilderness policies. The Wilderness Society has begun a wilderness management oversight program and one of its employees, Frank Beum, is completing the society's first comprehensive look at Forest Service wilderness management.

7. The National Park Service, also, has strengthened its wilderness policies. It is now requiring a management plan for each of its wilderness areas and has restricted the use of aircraft in wilderness for administrative purposes.

8. The Bureau of Land Management has developed a model wilderness organization that the other agencies would do well to emulate. Rejecting the seasonal technician approach to wilderness management, the BLM has built an organizational structure of 150 full-time professionals complete with a built-in wilderness career ladder. These positions are located at every level of the organization. The agency's Washington office, for example, has a wilderness branch with seven professional employees, more than are found in the other three agencies' Washington offices combined. Five of these officials rose in the ranks of the wilderness program, bringing to Washington years of wilderness experience. Although many of the BLM's wilderness employees are focused on its large wilderness study effort, two of the Washington office positions are devoted entirely to actual management and each of BLM's 25 wilderness areas has a full-time wilderness professional in charge and either a draft or final management plan in place. None of the other agencies can make similar claims.

As impressive as these new developments are, they are clearly not enough. They are only a limited beginning. Some major tasks still need to be accomplished and institutionalized to bring quality management to the wilderness system:

1. (A) The Forest Service needs to provide a career ladder for its wilderness employees by creating more professional positions with full-time wilderness responsibilities. Only then will wilderness get the same priority given to other Forest Service resource programs that already have full-time professionals in charge. A forester should be able to work principally on wilderness and not be forced to leave the wilderness field in order to have a successful career in the Forest Service. A Forest Service employee should not have to abandon his or her work in wilderness to receive recognition and promotions.

(B) The Forest Service needs to redraw some of its unit boundaries to stop the harmful practice of subdividing wilderness areas among ranger districts, national forests and even regions. The Frank Church—River of No Return Wilderness, for example, is managed by 12 ranger districts, 6 national forests and 2 regions. Most of these units have nonwilderness lands that take precedence over the wilderness resource. It is no wonder that the GAO report identifies numerous management problems in this wilderness area crisscrossed with administrative boundaries that have little relevance to the needs of the wilderness resource. Those national forest wilderness areas which are managed as one unit with one organization in charge and those ranger districts that are predominantly wilderness clearly have the most aggressive and comprehensive wilderness programs in the Forest Service today. The strong, creative programs at the Gila Wilderness in New Mexico, the Eagle Cap Wilderness in Oregon, the Superstition Wilderness in Arizona and the Selway-Bitterroot Wilderness in Idaho and Montana with its all wilderness Moose Creek ranger district are good working examples.

2. The National Park Service needs to set even better examples for its visitors by ending its widespread use of motorized equipment and vehicles inside wilderness for administrative purposes. This motorized use practice flies into the face of wilderness regulations and in fact suggests an attitude of do as the National Park Service says not as the National Park Service does. The park service also clearly needs to complete the aircraft overflight study mandated by Congress and quit its foot-dragging on this important project.

3. The Bureau of Land Management will need to fight to keep its impressive wilderness organizational structure in place and resist dilution once the statewide wilderness studies are completed in 1991. The BLM will need this organization to manage the millions of acres that Congress is today working hard to add in the decade of the 90's to the BLM's portion of the wilderness system.

4. (A) All four agencies, the National Park Service, the Fish and Wildlife Service, the Forest Service, and the Bureau of Land Management need to launch aggressive local, regional and national education programs on wilderness regulations and good camping ethics.

(B) All the agencies need to expand wilderness management and use research.

(C) All the agencies need to implement a nationwide monitoring system to measure trends in the condition of the wilderness resource.

(D) All the agencies need to add wilderness to the annual performance evaluations of line officers to hold them accountable for the condition of the resource. Seventy percent of the Forest Service ranger districts that responded to GAO's questionnaire reported that wilderness management was not a critical element on the performance appraisals of any of their employees.

(E) And the Forest Service, Park Service and Fish and Wildlife Service need to follow the BLM's lead and have directors of wilderness in their Washington and regional offices. Only then will wilderness have status and emphasis equal to that of other resource programs which already have directors of their own. There are directors of timber, range, wildlife, recreation, minerals and watershed. Is wilderness less important than these resources?

5. Congress needs to appropriate more money for wilderness management. I don't believe you are carpers who only complain that you need more money and I know that you understand that wilderness cannot be funded at the expense of other programs within your purview. I have worked closely with the House Appropriations Committee to increase wilderness funding without cutting other programs. For example, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs' report to the Budget Committee for fiscal year 1990 includes our subcommittee's recommendations for large dollar increases for wilderness. I followed up this committee report personally by testifying in April before the Appropriations Interior Subcommittee. These efforts are beginning to show results. The House version of the 1990 Interior Appropriations bill boosts funding for wilderness, trails and recreation. Unfortunately, the Senate version of the bill does not include these same increases for the Forest Service. These differences will now be worked out in the House/Senate conference in progress this week.

What a glorious birthday party for the wilderness act it would be if in the next decade we had a 1990's wilderness management revolution. If we could accomplish most of these tasks, it would truly be a second wilderness revolution. We can make it happen only with a positive, concerted effort on the part of all of us. We may not necessarily need new laws, new agencies and new missions. What we certainly need is to implement the existing wilderness laws and policies much more effectively.

The history of wilderness designation has had many heroes who were able to accomplish tasks just as difficult. Bob Marshall is a favorite. His list of accomplishments are awesome. He could hike 50 miles a day in tennis shoes—they don't make them like that anymore. Bob Marshall climbed every major peak in the Adirondacks. He lived with the Eskimos and wrote a best seller on Eskimo culture. Bob Marshall was one of the first explorer's of Alaska's Brooks Range. He was a founder of the Wilderness Society. And ultimately he rose to be the national director of recreation for the Forest Service, where he established America's first national wilderness preservation system, the foundation of the system we have today. And all this despite the fact that some of his professional colleagues thought he was an eccentric crackpot. And all this before he died at the early age of 39.

My enduring faith is that there may be a little of Bob Marshall in each of us—some of you may have even hiked in tennis shoes. My goal is to craft public policy and shape law which will let your good qualities blossom into the same spirit of wilderness so beautifully expressed by Bob Marshall. Surely nothing worthwhile comes easy, but you did not take a role as a public land manager and policy maker because it was easy. No, your role is not the route of least resistance. It is the route of a pathfinder who is exploring ways to excel in the intelligent and reasoned utilization and management of our wilderness resource. Have a great and successful conference and may the spirit of Bob Marshall and the spirit of wilderness be with you as you lead the Nation in a 1990's wilderness management revolution.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, October 6, 1989

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We pray, O God, that in the midst of weakness You give us strength; in the midst of despair, there is the gift of hope; with hurt, there is also healing; in doubt, there is faith; and in death, there is life. While we see so clearly, O God, the concerns that are before us, so keep us to see also Your eternal spirit that surrounds us and never lets us go. In Your name we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McEWEN] please come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. McEWEN led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

THE NEW FOOD CONTAMINATION PREVENTION ACT

(Mr. SMITH of New Jersey asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, back in June I stood in the well of the House and introduced legislation to end the disgusting and dangerous practice of backhauling garbage in trucks which also transport food. That legislation, H.R. 2681, received broad bipartisan support in the House. Today, after additional investigations and congressional hearings, I am pleased to join with my good friend MATT RINALDO, and over 30 other Members of Congress, to introduce a new and refined version of the Food Contamination Prevention Act.

Mr. Speaker, despite almost universal condemnation of this practice by food producers, processors, wholesalers, retailers, and transporters there is clear evidence that this practice continues. The pictures in front of me clearly show that: First tractor-trailers are continuing to haul a substantial volume of garbage to our Nation's landfills; second, that refrigerated trucks, which are specifically designed to haul fresh foods, are clearly hauling garbage; and third, that it will take more than a broom to remove the residues of garbage from these trucks.

It is time for Congress to put forward a comprehensive plan to regulate the transportation of garbage in vehicles used for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation I am introducing amends the Solid Waste Disposal Act so that any vehicle which transports solid waste is prohibited from carrying food or related products. All refrigerated vehicles, which are specially designed to carry fresh meat and other foods, would be banned from ever transporting garbage regardless of the content of their previous or future loads.

Mr. Speaker, the new Food Contamination Prevention Act mandates that any vehicle which transports solid waste be labeled as such in order to let shippers know that the vehicle has previously carried garbage. In addition, new subclasses of solid waste are created to accommodate the differences between empty bottles being returned for reuse, bundled newspapers destined for recycling, and garbage going to landfills.

Mr. Speaker, I urge quick action on this bill.

OUR AIRLINES AND OUR CREDIT SOCIETY ARE IN TROUBLE

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, today I would like briefly to address two subjects. The first, ever so briefly, is in this morning's Washington Post. The headline says Trump makes $7 billion bid for American Airlines.

Mr. Speaker, Donald Trump bid $7 billion for American Airlines. What concerns me about Mr. Trump's bid for American Airlines is that it is the next bite in the complete consumption of the healthy airlines in this country by those who want to convert equity to debt and make some money through quick speculation.

This country has about six or seven healthy airline carriers. Of these healthy airlines, several are targets of leveraged buyouts. The leveraged acquisitions began with Northwest, followed by United, and now with American. It will likely embrace the other healthy carriers, too. Speculators will put in play the airline companies and load them with debt. This will require interest payments that, in some cases, are greater than the net incomes of those airline carriers. All for speculative purposes. Airlines are especially vulnerable to economic swings, so when the next recession comes around, we will see our major airlines in serious economic trouble.

Guess who is going to be asked to bail out the airline industry? Yes, the American taxpayer. Now, the Secretary of Transportation and I think the Bush administration is privately concerned, but, generally speaking, publicly silent about these potential problems. I wonder why? I wonder why, when the public interest clearly conflicts with private greed and private speculation that is unhealthy for this country, this administration will not decide that it's time to stand up and wonder whether this kind of speculation in the airline industry should not be halted.

Mr. Speaker, I have written today to President Bush and Secretary Skinner asking that they pay some attention to what is going on. What is going on is not healthy for this country. Airline takeovers might make short-term profits for some speculators and even some current stockholders, but they pose a serious threat to this country's airline industry, and I think it ought to be stopped.

Mr. Speaker, the second subject that I want to discuss today concerns the issue of savings. In the last month we have had a tremendous amount of controversy on the floor of this House about something called capital gains. Some people say that the reason we need a tax preference that gives most of its benefits to the wealthy is because we need incentives for savings in this country.

Well, that sounds good because savings equal investment; investment equals economic growth. I am reminded, however, that the desire to increase savings in this country conflicts with almost everything that everybody in this country is confronted with every single day.

I say to my colleagues, "You walk down the street a couple of blocks from this Capitol, or down the street on any main street in this country, and you'll see a picture window beckoning to you. It says, 'Come over here, customer. We want to talk to you. We want you to buy this product that's in the picture window. We don't care that you don't need it. It doesn't matter to us that you haven't saved up for it. It doesn't matter to us you can't afford it. You come and buy it, and take it home. You don't have to make the first payment for 6 months, and we'll send you a rebate 2 months from now.' "

Mr. Speaker, that is the whole mentality of this credit society. It pervades Main Street and Wall Street.

The credit mentality barrages consumers at every turn, and I, for the last 6 months, have been getting a great deal of mail as I bet every American gets.

About 6 months ago I thought to myself, "Well, I will just save some of it, and someday go down to the floor of the House and share with those who are interested in the kind of mail I get." I am sure it is the kind of mail everybody gets. It is a literal barrage of mail from people who want me to take their credit cards. It does not matter that I do not want it, or that I do not know these folks. I have never written to them. They are probably nice people, but they have become my pen pals. I want to describe to everyone, and I want all of us to think about, as I do this, the admonition of Members in the House who say that what we really need to do is increase savings. They want to increase savings by giving a tax preference to the rich, even when faced with this sort of behavior in our mails, the behavior of those companies who preapprove us, all of us, for massive amounts of credit that we do not want and we do not need. Then we say we want to increase savings.

Let me go through some of these if I might. Here is a letter I received from a major banking center. In fact, it is from the vice president, and it says:

DEAR MR. DORGAN: Your new Visa card with a $3,000 credit line puts more sunshine in your life. We have already preapproved it for you. It has been reserved in your name. In fact, our card now has a new look reflecting new benefits. Because you have an excellent credit record, your Visa Card is waiting with a reserve $3,000 credit. All you have to do is sign your name, and, again, you will like the look of our card.

Well, Bank X, thank you very much. I did not write to you, and I am not interested in your card; but it is nice to know that you have changed the look, and it will put sunshine in my life if I decide to take it.

Another major bank wrote to me. I do not know Bank Y, I have not written to it, but they wrote to me, and they said that they have available for me, preapproved, a Gold Visa Card. They preapproved a $6,000 credit line in my name, and it is at only half the price of the first year's membership fee. It says that this card is so special that it is being offered only to a select few individuals in America, "and with it you are going to enjoy immediate credit worldwide made available by the Bank Y, a name everyone knows." That sure made me feel good, despite the fact that I had not written to them, and did not want their credit card. Nevertheless, they have told me that up to $6,000 in credit has been preapproved.

I then got a letter from Visa again. This was from yet another company. It says:

Chances are, Mr. Dorgan, that you use your credit card as a means of managing your money, so we have a new Visa card designed just for you.

That is pretty comforting to know that this company, as big as it must be, has designed a card just for me. They say that if I will take their card, my annual interest rate is only going to be 15.9 percent. God bless them. I have no idea how this California company got my address. Again, we are not pen pals, but I sure appreciate their thinking of me.

That was followed on its heels by another letter I received just a couple of days later in my mailbox. This "consumer bank," said:

Mr. Dorgan, up to $10,000 in credit has been put aside for you, and there is no membership fee at all for the first 4 months.

They do say in their first line of their letter something that makes some sense. They say:

Why on earth do you need another credit card? You have probably been offered more cards than you will ever need.

Boy, they have that right.

Wouldn't you still be interested in one that actually gives you more for less money.

They ask, and that is precisely what this consumer bank has to offer.

This Gold MasterCard gives you a better deal, much lower annual fees, $5,000 and up to $10,000 approval. Later you can apply for $25,000. $25 annual membership fee.

A real deal, and then only 15.9 percent interest rate. Of course, considering the fact that inflation is only about 4 percent, that means one is only paying about 11.9 percent on their money. I can understand, that is quadruple the traditional or predictable rent on money, but it is only 15.9 percent rent, they say. The chairman of the board who wrote to me, and it is very unusual to get a letter directly from the chairman of the board addressed to me saying he has taken his time to give me a $10,000 credit line. I appreciated that, too, but did not decide to get that credit card.

Then several days later I received this in the mail, another preapproved credit card loan from a worldwide bank. This is a big company and widely known. They loan to Brazil and Mexico. Why on Earth would they think of just ordinary folks? But they do. The director of consumer credit wrote to me, and he said:

Dear Mr. Dorgan, we have already approved you. You are going to get our credit with no annual fee.

He says:

You have been approved for $5,000.

That is a heck of a deal when one gets a letter from a director, an executive of a worldwide company that loans to foreign governments, and they tell one that they think about you, that they care about you, and they have already made a corporate decision to preapprove you for $5,000. It makes one feel good if they do not get any other mail.

Then a couple of days later, I got an even fancier looking letter. This one is on that fancy cloth-type stationery, which costs a lot of money to buy stationery with rag content. It offers a special access credit line. I did not get much mail that day, and I felt kind of good, because I opened it and here is a letter from the president of yet another big bank. Who on Earth would expect to get letters from presidents of banks? Does anyone know what the president said to me? He said:

You know something, Mr. Dorgan, I am pleased to enclose your personal application for an extraordinary line of credit up to $25,000 requiring no collateral, and it is a highly competitive interest rate of only 16.5 percent.

God bless this company. Can they do any more for America?

A couple of days later, the worldwide bank wrote back to me, and this time by a different fellow. They apparently had forgotten that they wrote to me only a few days before. This letter said:

Because you have an excellent credit rating, we have reserved for you $3,000 in preapproved credits.

They had just sent me something that said they had already reserved $5,000, so it occurred to me to write to them and ask them, "Does this mean I get $8,000 from the worldwide bank?" But I decided not to bother, because this second letter came from the president, and when the president of the bank says, "You only have $3,000 set aside for you," and one of the directors of the consumer finance division says $5,000, my guess is that the president is going to prevail anyway.

In the middle of all of this in the past couple of months we had a new store move to town, and they just sent this puny little letter. It was a top-drawer merchandise store. They sent a little note that said, "By the way, you have been preapproved to get our credit card." This is nice. I do not know that I have ever shopped at this store. But it is nice of them to think of me, and I expect everybody else in the neighborhood.

I had not received any mail from one credit card company in this 6-month period, but sure enough, it showed up.

Again, the copresident wrote to me, and she said:

With your excellent credit history, you ought to be paying less for credit, yet most of the credit cards you have to choose from charge 18 to 21 percent, but not us. We only charge 13.8 percent. In fact, we have preapproved for you a line of credit of $4,000.

That was sure nice of them, because I had never chosen this card either, knew nothing about them, and here is the copresident deciding to write to me and tell me they personally have made a decision to preapprove me for a $4,000 line of credit.

I have very few cards, as a matter of fact, but one company wrote to me, and it said, "You are already approved to receive our card." This was a little bit unimaginative, because it was sort of a commercial-looking envelope, but inside the envelope was a letter from its president, as well, and it makes one feel awfully good. They probably could have afforded a better envelope for this, but it makes one feel good that the president is writing himself. He said, "You know, Mr. Dorgan, you are preapproved for a credit line of $2,500."

I maybe should have written back to him and said did you know that a Wall Street bank thought I was worth $8,000 in preapproval? Not that I need any of this, but he said $2,500 was available for preapproved credit.

He said, do you know what is different about us? We give you cash-back bonuses.

Heck, how can you refuse cash-back bonuses when you buy?

I thought all of that was nice. That is a lot of mail you get when you do not get any other mail.

But there actually is better mail. This is probably the fanciest I have gotten. This actually has gold lettering on the envelope. It says, "Carry an additional degree of financial flexibility."

This is what you call up-town stationery. This is good rag content. It looks real pretty.

This comes from the senior vice president. The senior vice president says:

Your continued financial responsibility has earned you the status of a gold card member and the ability to apply for our ultimate credit card.

Apparently there are different levels here. There is the ability to go gold, and then to the ultimate level. I did receive a request to apply for a platinum card as well, but I could not find the envelope this morning. My guess is had I been forced as a consumer to choose, that platinum would have been a close choice with the ultimate card, depending on what their annual rate was and depending on how much their presidents had personally decided to preapprove me for credit.

There are more, but it seems to me with that kind of deluge of mail from companies that want to give all of us credit, and my guess is anybody listening to this understands, that it is not just what I get in my mailbox, it is what everybody gets in their mailbox, unsolicited credit card applications, preapproved credit cards.

Two nights ago, I received a call at 8 o'clock in the evening, picked up the phone, and it was a credit card company saying we would like you to sign up for a credit card. We want to send you this credit card, by telephone solicitation.

Everybody is besieged and barraged by these unsolicited credit cards that are flooding this country. Then we have people stand up here in the U.S. Congress saying do you know what we really need to do? We need to stimulate more savings in America.

How on Earth do you stimulate more savings when the entire private sector is choking on credit?

In the old days my grandmother, who is 93 years old, will tell you that people would talk about saving enough to buy something. Has anybody heard anybody talking about saving up to buy something?

You do not have to save up to buy anything in America today, you just buy it. You get a rebate before you have to make the first payment.

You wonder a little bit about why does this not make sense? It does not make sense because in other countries there is a premium on savings. In our country there is a premium on consumption, even consumption you do not need and consumption you cannot afford.

In Japan, you simply cannot buy a house unless you have a significant downpayment. That is unfortunate, but that is a fact. In Japan you cannot go in and buy a car unless you have a significant downpayment. That is not very convenient, but it forces people to save up if they want to buy a car.

In this country we say it does not matter. Heck, you can go through bankruptcy and we will send you a card right after the bankruptcy because then you are a good risk, they say.

This country is awash in this sort of baloney. At some point it has to stop and we have to get back to basics.

This country's economy will be healthy once again and survive and succeed once again when two things happen: First, we decide that we are going to start saving, we are going to save up to buy things and buy what we can afford; and second, what we can afford is a product that has, a different subject, but it is just as important, the old notion of quality.

A friend of mine from Bismarck, ND, last Christmas in the parking lot as he was pulling out, having just put a Japanese television set in the trunk of his German car, waved and said, "Byron, when are you going to get things straightened out down there in Washington?"

As I drove away I kind of smiled a little bit, because it occurred to me if tomorrow we straightened everything out with just a snap of the finger, we would still have serious problems.

He is not stupid. He, as a consumer, bought a Japanese television set and a German car I assume because he thought they were the best products for the best price for him.

In the long run for us to succeed, not only do we have to save and get away from this wash in credit, but we also have to be able to purchase products that are quality products.

That commitment to quality means that in the long run across the world someplace that when someone buys something with a tag that says "made in the USA," they have to believe immediately, I know what that means. That means that is the finest I can buy.

Think of how much things have changed. Thirty years ago if your folks gave you something for Christmas that said "made in Japan," you thought it was junk, and much of it was.

Consumer products made in Japan and many areas these days represents quality. Some people do not like American products because they do not think they are well made. In the international competition and international marketplace we will succeed, it seems to me, if we have a basic commitment to quality. Part of having a basic commitment to quality is being able to produce with the latest technology available.

Part of that is to have the investment capital to buy it. A major part of this is to have the savings available for the investment capital to be available. Savings relates to this.

There is solicitation, the unwanted and unwarranted solicitation all over this country by people who possess credit cards and want to sell them to us at enormous interest rates at enormous fees. When they say to us on these applications that if we take their credit cards they will only charge us 17- or 18- or 19-percent interest rates, I wonder what on Earth are they thinking of. Do they think the customers are stupid?

Inflation is at 4 percent. Traditional rent for money would bring another 4 or 5 percent. Interest rates should be 9 percent tops.

They are saying we are going to give you a deal. We will send the credit card you do not want with interest rates you should not have to pay.

That is not the road for this country. The road is a more thoughtful road that requires us to begin saving, to develop a commitment to saving, and turn away from this credit.

It is not just the private sector. It is the public sector especially. We have a nearly $3 trillion debt and a nearly $200 billion per year deficit. I know some people say the deficit this year is $100 billion or $120 billion. They surely are smarter than that. They surely know that the deficit is closer to $200 billion.

It is just that they, like everyone else for the last 10 years, have bought into this notion that we do not want to give anybody bad news because we do not want to force anybody to make choices they do not want to make. This country has to make a choice. We raise about 19 percent of our GNP in revenue and spend 24 percent in spending. We have got an annual deficit of about $200 billion, a $3 trillion debt, and a cancer in the Federal budget growing faster than any other program which is called interest on the debt.

Interest on the debt does not do anything for anybody. It does not provide prenatal care for babies, it does not provide child care, it does not provide education, it does not provide defense. It does not provide anything for anybody. Yet, it is a cancer that is the fastest growing item in the Federal budget.

At some point in the public sector and in the private sector this society, this country, had better sober up.

We face increasingly difficult international competition. It is competition we will not win unless we get our economic house in order and put an end to the public and private credit binges.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

UPDATE ON ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, FINANCE AND URBAN AFFAIRS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention that our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] has touched upon some points that are of great interest. I would like to point out to the gentleman that the invitations he has had for these banks and bank presidents are something that I have not received, so he must be very carefully selected for credit availability.

Perhaps it has to do with the fact that he may be feared because he is the author of the anti-junk-bond amendment to the S&L legislation that we considered here a few months ago. Maybe they just have respect for Mr. DORGAN and want to keep him on the right side of things by making these very gorgeous offerings.

On a more serious vein, this is a very similar reflection on some of the things that are out of joint and have for voting implications for our country.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I do not want anybody to think that I am getting solicitations that the gentleman is not getting. My guess is that the gentleman just throws them away. I throw a lot of them away without opening them because they are just junk solicitation.

I just happened to decide to open all these financial solicitations. The gentleman probably throws them all away. But I know he is getting the same solicitations.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Actually there has been no change whatsoever since I assumed the chairmanship of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs. Actually I do not recall receiving that kind of an invitation. I have had some Visa card invitations, no particular line of credit other than what they traditionally offer, I guess. But those two, I think, one fundamental thing the gentleman touched upon in comparing the savings history and practices in Japan, the actual purchase of a home, we are talking about a very different societal structure. Also I would like to point out that Japan has pretty strict controls of interest rates. They have no upward permissibility beyond 9 percent, at the most. The average is about 7 percent. We have not had any. As a matter of fact, I have pointed that out ad finitum or ad nauseam, whichever the point of view is, over the course of 28 years of being in this House, that it was the 1865 National Currency Act which was debated and approved just about the time President Lincoln was shot. That actually set the predicate for what has turned out to be a national banking system. But it also eliminated the interest control legislation that had been on the books since the founding of the Nation.

As a matter of fact, as I point out again as a point of history, the very beginning of our nationhood, we must remember that the first 10 years we had the First and the Second Continental Congress and nobody bothered to think of such a thing as an office of a president or the phrase used in the Constitutional Convention, "Chief Magistrate," because that was a feared office.

But as everybody knows, at the bottom of everything is banking, finance. Behind everything throughout history as far as we can find any recording of human history is this question of financing or banking. The question of interest, for instance, in the Code of Hammurabi, 7,000 years before Christ, there are strict prohibitions, on what we call usury.

The ancient Hebrew rulers and kingdoms had absolute prohibition of usury. In fact, they had the 50-year jubilee in which all debts were forgiven after 50 years. That was the first meaning of that word "jubilee," which we jubilantly use sometimes.

So that all through history at the time that our Lord Jesus Christ was preaching, it was a fearful punishment for anybody accused of usurious behavior. And also throughout history.

But our country has had absolutely no interest controls since 1865.

I dug out the history of interest in out country, the interest legislation some 25 years ago, and did quite a bit of research. At the time that the 1865 act was approved, there was no such thing as reporters of debates, no such thing as a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

You had journals that were prepared by private entrepreneurs and reporters.

Researching some of those was most interesting.

Now my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], touched on some points that I had intended to discuss here. First, this is a continuation of what I committed myself to my colleagues to do the very first week that the 101st Congress convened in January. In fact, I think it was the second day, on January 4, that I first addressed the House and reported on the activities, as chairman of the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, as it is now called.

Incidentally, the beginning of a banking committee in the U.S. House of Representatives also goes back to the 1865 National Currency Act. At that time there was no such thing as a banking committee in the House. It was the Ways and Means Committee. It was an overall committee.

Subtracted from that as a result of the 1865 National Currency Act was the beginning of what we call the Banking Committee which is now one of the historical full or standing committees of the House. But it actually sprung from, as many other committees did subsequent to 1865 in recognizing the country's changing and growing nature and characteristic, from the overall committee.

But behind everything is financing.

Thomas Jefferson, even Alexander Hamilton, who was considered a centralist, both were very preoccupied in the First Continental and the Second Continental Congresses with the question of what to do. Everybody has to have a banker. Nations, States, other entities, kings all had to have their bankers or their sources of credit.

So when the First Continental Congress met, they were trying to figure out a solution. So the bankers in Philadelphia then said, "Well, we will provide, but you are going to have to pay this much interest."

Well, that set forth Mr. Thomas, Jefferson, who history will reveal, if you study his words, was the most critical public man in the history of the Nation, of the bankers as a class.

So they said, "Absolutely not. We will charter," what turned out to be the first bank of North America, "but you are going to have to limit yourself to no more than 6 percent interest." And by golly, the bankers who had said "We can't do it" came in and did it.

The same thing happened with the subsequent, Second Continental Congress.

Now the question that I pose and that I pose to the gentleman from North Dakota, and if he does not have a chance to listen to me I hope he will read the RECORD, to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] is: Even what the gentleman mentioned as being reasonable, 9 percent, is not. It is not reasonable. You do not have a viable society based upon that kind of interest rate level.

So that what today is taken for granted as 12 percent being average is absolutely still a punishing and an exaction that is unconscionable, that has ended up in wrecking and turning around the whole nature of the American economy and actually opening the breach for what is now considered to be a very serious dilemma confronting us all.

Interest rates by definition are the mechanism by virtue of which wealth is transferred within a given society. This is what has happened in our country, particularly since the absolutely abusive and conscriptive interest rate instabilities.

The idea that a so-called prime interest will have reached the level of 20 or 21 percent in 1979 and 1980 is absolutely impossible to believe, even in my own mind. Some of my predecessor chairmen and great Americans, I am sure, must have turned over in their grave a hundred times. However, it has managed to transfer wealth. What has happened now is what I think a forecast of an eventual social crisis, because constantly and inexorably for almost 10 years we have had an extraction of wealth from the lowest and least affluent sectors of our society to the top 3 to 5 percent of our society. That, I think, is not only unconscionable, the full impact and the detrimental effect of that has yet to be established.

My predecessor speaker also mentioned Japan and the fact that it has, for instance, made inroads. He referred to the Japanese-made automobile and television set. However, all that has begun with financing, mostly by American interests a couple of decades ago, a decade and a half ago. In Europe, which is something, incidentally, which I have discussed since the middle 1960's, we now have the full development of what seems to be by 1992 the single market or the one European development. In the financial and international financial world, that is pretty much in place. I first mentioned this after the economic summit meeting on May 1, 1979, in Bonn, Germany, at which time President Carter attended. The communique that came out of that summit meeting, it was a great communique, relatively speaking, but the least line of that communique said, "We agree in principle to the European monetary system and the European currency unit."

At that time, no American newspaper reported it other than those papers like the New York Times, I believe, that had the text of the communique. However, nobody even referred to that last line. I did. All that summer the RECORD will show I discussed the implications of it. By the time that President Reagan went to the same Economic Summit meeting at the same place in Bonn, Germany, in 1985, again the first week in May, the reports in the American papers would lead Members to believe that the President went there for one purpose, and that was to lay a wreath of flowers at Bitburg Cemetery, which aroused such controversy because that was a Nazi soldier cemetery.

However, the real truth is that what came out of that conference was the fact that EMS and ECU had been fully fleshed out. That was done the month prior to May in Palermo by the finance officers of the European countries or at least by the big 7 or 10, whichever point of view a person has, and today it is fully in place. Almost all of the financial transactions today reported in the financial papers, in other papers in Europe, whether they be French, British, German or in terms of ECS's European currency units, the ECU, right now is worth better than a dollar and a quarter. It has a stability that the dollar does not have.

The big fear, as I have repeated, and again as what I said in 1979, seems to arouse very little interest on the part of anybody, is that the threat of the dollar being replaced as the international reserve unit is very, very present and clear to my mind.

Now, some of the big and influential bankers that I have mentioned this to seem to think that well, at some distant future that may be a possibility. However, they do admit there is that possibility. What I think they are dead wrong in, is to not see that all the conditions are there for it happening any time soon. It depends on unforeseen activities now, but which are predictable. Now when that happens, given what my predecessor colleague mentioned or referred to, and that is the debt structure that we have piled on ourselves within the last 6 years, particularly, it can be calamitous.

The liberties, and above all, the economic freedom of our country is gone because all of this huge debt, and we must remember the gentleman is quite correct when he said our public debt is almost $3 trillion, well, it is more than that, if we add a so-called contingency debt. This is what the Europeans call our off-budget obligations. Those are now approximating $2 trillion. In the meanwhile, the Japanese, sure, they have invested and they continue to invest in incremental increase amounts in assets in our country, but the British have done so twice as much, and nobody seems to say much about that. Maybe, perhaps, there is little element of racism there. I do not know.

All I know is that the big question is, in what sectors, and to what extent has this intervention and penetration changed from indirect to direct as set acquisition. For that reason, I wanted to report to my colleagues that the committee I chair is intensely concerned, and I have begun on a staff level to lay the predicate for what will be a very intense looking into this by the committee. However, we are so burdened now with so many of the issues that have joined and conjoined that we had foreseen, but which, unfortunately, have been allowed to compound and join at a critical juncture in our developmental history so that it is a question of to what extent.

Now Canada, for example, years ago, created controls, and they have a screening commission on foreign investments of acquisition through direct asset acquisition. In the case of banking, of course, Canada has much less banking activities or institutions than the United States, but the fundamental principle is the same. Now, we have nothing. There is no oversight. This is a reason that we are also contemporaneously going into the question of the Federal Reserve Board, and what do we need to do to bring to a new modern world a structure of the Federal Reserve Board that goes back to 1913 where the country was an entirely different country. As a matter of fact, it was not until just last year that the San Francisco Federal Reserve Regional Bank was even allowed to participate. Maybe not as a voting member, because the structure, as I say and repeat, goes back to 1913, but at least be present at the open market committee deliberations. The open market not being open, but closed, and which has the faith and the power to determine the rise or fall of any administration through their control, directly and indirectly, of such things as interest rates, through the purchase and the price fixing of Treasury bills and yields.

Mr. Speaker, the British used to have a similar system until they reformed it after the war. The old Chancellor of the Exchequer used to have that power, and in many instances he could determine the rise and fall of a given British administration.

We are still doing business in a rather outmoded way, so we intend to have, and the staff has been laying the groundwork for that, the Federal Reserve Board, 75 years later, because 75 years ago we had—so, anyway, time is awasting. We have so much to do and so very few resources to do it with, but these, I think I ought to report to my colleagues, are on the top billing. They have everything to do with the fate of our country.

At the bottom of everything is financing and banking. I have raised that issue since 1964.

I had been asking the chairman and the subcommittee chairmen on Appropriations what part of the defense bill represented a percentage cost for the so-called defense of Europe. All through the years the chairmen would say, "Well, we can't tell you that because these items are scattered all through the budget and the defense budget," and I would say, "Well, I have extrapolated a figure based on an analysis of what I would say was directly and indirectly attached to the cost," and I figure in 1967, I figured even with Vietnam having gone up to almost $45 billion, that the net cost in that budget was about 50 percent. By the time it reached $315 billion, about the second or third year of the Reagan administration, I figured that from 60 to 63 percent, as it is today, represents what would be reflective of our costs for the so-called defense of Europe.

Mr. Speaker, I was also pointing out since 1964 that this was unrealistic, that our leadership in and out of the country and the Presidency was still of the mindset of a Europe of 1947 and that that was gone forever and a day.

And I have implored three Presidents, including just 2 months ago in my last special order a plea to President Bush, and this was before we had this phenomenon of the East Germans telling West Germany, saying that actually World War II had not ended, there is no peace treaty and that the American leadership should be exerted, convoke a meeting, and with the change and the dropping of the tremendous fears the Russians have had about a revanchist Germany, that the time was right for American leadership to say, "Hey, we've got to review this. The whole predicate of our defense for Europe is gone."

Mr. Speaker, the whole thing had built up in a cold war atmosphere because of the so-called fundamental German question which was the beginning of the argument that led to the cold war nervousness for all of these decades. Now the Germans and the others fear us more than they do the Russians. Why? Because even though we have changed the designation of our troops from occupation to defense, we are still occupation to that average German.

Mr. Speaker, we have over 300,000 of our military in Germany alone, not counting the families. How many has Great Britian had? How many have the French had all along? Nobody wants to ask those questions.

What was the big premise, Oh, that we would be protecting them from an inland, through Middle Europe, Russian invasion. But what was the fear? That Russia would want to come through Germany, and what? Take France? Well, that was preposterous from the beginning. Anybody even distantly aware of the thinking and of some of the internal history of Russia would have said, "Hey, look. You're picturing a Russian that is really stupid, and they're not."

Mr. Speaker, why would the Russians that cannot even handle Poland or Czechoslovakia want to think in terms of coming to France?

And then France itself left NATO. Their basic premise under deGaulle was that, "We don't need the American umbrella. We can take care of ourselves. We will develop a force de frappe that's superior."

So, in light of that changing world there is no recognition on our level of that, and I think it is a fatal error.

At the same time domestically we have piled up the most tremendous internal debt among just us, the citizens, the greatest domestic, private debt in history. The corporate debt is astronomical so that we have this kind of continuation of instability as we see now in the value of the dollar. So, it rises.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the newspapers this morning, the New York Times, talked about intervention, which I think has been absolutely a foolish, contradictory thing. The Federal Reserve Board, which everybody considers our central banker, which really in a way is more than and in another way it is less than the central banks of Europe, has been spending millions and billions of dollars. The Japanese are supposed to have intervened to shore up the value of the dollar.

Then just a few years ago economists came before our committee and said, "No, we've got to let the dollar drop so that we can compete with the competitors in trade."

When I asked these outstanding economists, "Well, how far do you think the dollar should be allowed to drop?" nobody had thought of that.

So, I said, "What makes you think that you have the control today to fine tune a drop of a dollar?"

Mr. Speaker, that is gone from us. We have lost control. There are now forces in the external world, and have been for about 8 years, over which we no longer have control. The Reagan so-called well-being or prosperity, which is usury, has been fed by borrowed money. Foreign capital; that is fickle, but has come here attracted by high interest yields.

So, I would ask these economists, "Well wait. Given the gridlock you have now where the Federal Reserve Board itself has lost the power to control, you don't have the world you had 10 years ago."

Mr. Speaker, we do not even have the world we had 5 years ago in that respect in the international financial world. Wars are lost or won at the finance tables. I say to my colleagues, "Even if you win in the field, it could be lost at the finance tables."

All during the Vietnam era, in fact in 1972, to illustrate the point, when President Nixon finally had that big breakthrough in going to China, the Chinese would not let the Presidential plane get there until we had guaranteed in advance payment of costs, $10 million in gold equivalent.

At this moment gold reserves: for instance, France has never demonetized. We did. I will never forget how unsuccessfully I battled in 1975 and beginning with January 1, 1976.

Secretary Bill Simon, Secretary of the Treasury, then on the first day of January announced that the Treasury was going to auction gold. In talking with him I said, "But, Mr. Secretary, you know where the gold is going to go.

"You are going to take it out of Fort Knox, and it is going to end up in the Central Bank of France." He said, "No, we have prohibition in the auction that no central bank can bid." I said, "But, my God, don't you know that you have agents that will come in as individual persons and bid?" He had two auctions, and then they stopped. Why did they stop? He laughed at me and said, "Well, this is just to prove that as far as we are concerned gold is out as a monetary factor. It is demonetized." I said, "You can't do it unilaterally."

Proof: Lately with all of the Third World debt transactions that our private banks, which I warned about in August of 1979, 10 years and 2 months ago, I was in this well, pointing out that in less than 1 year's time from $3 billion, the overhang on these debts to countries that could not pay back, and those are the words I used, had grown from $3 billion to over $45 billion by the key, private banks of the United States.

What would you think if your local banker or your board were to go out and make loans in excess of your capitalization with no collateral and to clients that had no ostensible means of paying back? When I raised those issues, and I will say that there is one man who did pay attention, and that was then Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Arthur Burns, who the day after my speech appeared in the RECORD, called me and asked me to have breakfast with him. After I had breakfast with him, I was more troubled than ever. He said, "You know, you are right. When I raised this issue to the bankers at the convention in Honolulu, HI, they almost threw me out." I said, "But, Mr. Chairman, you are the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. Do something." He said, "I do not know what I can do. It's private." I said, "You have section 14(b) and another section in the Federal Reserve Board Act in which you can say, 'Look, fellows, you want to do that, we are going to demand additional reserves." "I don't know that I can do it.' " At that point I said, "Mr. Chairman, when I came in, I was flattered and hopeful. Now I don't know what to think. All I know is I am very pessimistic, because unless action is taken now, this will reach a point in which the safety and soundness of our banking system could be affected." That, I think, he did not accept.

What is happening today? By all accounts, that is one factor and, as a matter of fact, I recognized it, because we had not even organized the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs on January 5 when we had hearings on the Third World debt situation. These are sovereign debts, that is, these are private American bankers, to sovereign countries. The whole history of sovereign debt is most pessimistic, going back to the Spanish kings and the French kings and even the British kings who wanted to wage war, borrow money, and then not pay back. The whole history is very dreary, and I do not think it is going to be any different in our case today except that, of course, now the banks want the Government or the taxpayer to come in and say, "No matter what, we will rescue you from this folly."

In 1979 when I raised the issue, "But how can you go on this overhang," I was chairman of the Subcommittee on International Finance, and I was well aware of the financial structure of these particular countries that had been loaned this money. I said, "Look, here is their inability." They said, "Oh, but this is recycled Arab oil money," meaning that this was money that had been deposited in these banks by the Arab oil-exporting countries. I said, "But that is still money on your books that you are lending. You still have to account for it. You are still going to have to try to get some payment."

So where are we now? They have to write down, they have added reserves. What does that mean? As the chairman of Citicorp said, after the Mexico deal which incidentally does not leave Mexico any more viable, it just continues the same old thing, where money is loaned to the country to pay over interest, but not 1 penny on principal, so that the amount of the debt keeps growing and the inability to pay gets worse. Of course, the taxpayer will be looked to in the name of saving, what, the safety and soundness of our banking system. So much for that.

But let us go to the other. All wars have to be financed. The method of financing has been the same. In the case of sovereign debt, the history is that those sovereign debts were never paid back. Unlike the Latin American countries where almost 100 percent of that borrowing has been government or sovereign from private bankers, the African countries are the other way around. There we have less sovereign debt and mostly with the international structure such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

All of these are creatures of a world that emerged from World War II, and that world financial structure collapsed by the late 1960's. I remember in 1968 the first forewarnings, that the dollar was going to have to be devalued with the so-called Roosa dollar, and this was a so-called two-tier based on the gold exchange that existed.

How many of my colleagues realize that it was President Nixon who devalued the dollar 10 percent when we took the country off the gold exchange system on August 15, 1971? Why no, that is supposed to be done by liberal Democrats. It was the conservatives who did it all. It was Mr. Nixon who devalued.

Then we had an additional devaluation a year or two later. Fortunately, and with a great sense of humility, but a sense of responsibility, I put all of that thinking in the RECORD by the use of this forum, this great hallowed forum.

Today the question is: What are we willing to do at this time? It is almost impossible to think of reform, control of interest rates.

My goodness, I introduced a cap bill several years ago, and I could not get one single sponsor and did get a lot of criticism in the financial world.

As I said, behind every war there has to be a banker for financing. We learn nothing. The democracies in people's wars have learned very little, unfortunately, from the day of king-made wars. The only thing is we go at them differently and more awesomely, and the destruction has been exponentially increased to the point now where we can extinguish each other.

As I have said time and time again, I guess it is a rat race between the world learning that we are all created equal or be cremated equally.

The bottom of it all is financing. This is the reason that through the 28 years and from the beginning when I was assigned, when I first came onto the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, I have stayed on the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs. It is really my line of interest.

The so-called war against or war on drugs, which I think is a misnomer, behind it all is banking.

Around 1975, I had reports in my hometown of San Antonio of some very questionable international, that is Mexico-United States transactions. To my surprise, we had no laws controlling. So after much imposing on the then chairman, finally getting the subcommittee chairman, later chairman of the full committee, finally to come to San Antonio, we had hearings, and we brought up some very, very disagreeable facts about some questionable financial transactions, cross-border, and how some unfortunate American investors had been taken to the cleaners, and how the safety and viability of some of the financial institutions, S&L's and banks had been actually reduced to nothing, in fact, led to the downfall of those institutions.

I would invite my colleagues to get the printed hearings of the proceedings of our committee from San Antonio and read them, because you will see that that was the forerunner of the legislation that took 4, 5, maybe even 6 years before we had a little bit of legislation on what we call money laundering.

Unfortunately, the legislation we enacted but had at least some impact, by the time the administration became interested and the Justice Department established the task force and we began to pinpoint points in Florida, Texas, and California, it was obvious and there was no question from the volume of cash transactions that this was drug money being laundered. There was no question of that. The FBI, Treasury officials and other intelligence agency officials all came before our committee and reported the same thing. We realized we had to improve the legislation. In the meanwhile when Mr. Reagan took office, he delegated to the Vice President, now President Bush, the task of being head of the war against drugs. Unfortunately the Vice President did not understand the finance of it.

My colleagues, you can throw the entire Treasury into the war against drugs and you will get nowhere until you have control.

The ancient book of wisdom, the Talmud of the Hebrews or Jews, has a story about how this rabbi commented on these thieves, the equivalent of our car prowlers and whatnot who would steal these goods.

The question was, what do you do to stop it? This rabbi said, well, where do they dispose of the goods? He said the hole where the fox takes his food and whatnot. You first have to close that hole.

In other words, you have to stop the fence, the outlet, the market. Unless we stop the profitable aspects of the banks in laundering these now billions of dollars of drug money, we will get nowhere, my colleagues, nowhere.

When this legislation comes up, I intend to have some input from that standpoint.

In the meanwhile, my predecessor chairman did not follow through on perfecting the law on money laundering.

I have nothing but very deep and abiding respect and affection for our President. He served in the House from the Houston district in Texas. I have known him as a very caring and warm and most respected individual. But it kind of hurt me to see the reports that appeared in the paper a few days after he made his speech on national television and produced a plastic bag of drugs and said it had been procured just a block away. Then the story was brought out that this was a concocted transaction, that the drug enforcement officials had to give some prop to the speech.

I think more awesome is that the biggest banks that the task force, which Mr. Bush when he became head of drug enforcement abolished and could not be interested in banking, the laundering aspect, and unfortunately killed that momentum, the biggest culprit bank in Florida was left untouched after the so-called Vice Presidential Task Force, and now has a branch less than two blocks from the White House, right here in the District of Columbia.

Have they stopped money laundering? The statistics coming from the Federal Reserve Board still show a lot of activity. So we will go into this, and I hope by the time everybody starts getting into the parasitism of legislating on the drug war that we will try to offer something in the way of money laundering.

To sum up, the forecast is gloomy. We have built up this tremendous feverish speculative force. The stock market, for instance, is no longer a true reflection of actual transactions in the industrial world, output, manufacturing. It is a reflection of feverish paper transactions.

One of the most troubling things which I reported last year is that 10-year Treasury bonds are being held less than 30 days.

Yesterday's story was that the stock market had reached the highest levels ever in history. That is exactly the gyrations which existed before the big busts both in 1929 and 1987. So we are all on tender hooks here, and I believe that people should know it.

My primary concern above all is the safety and soundness of the American financial system. It is under great threat. I think that, God willing, and with our colleagues being informed, the main thing is to get the information to our colleagues, and we will find a resolution of even these most difficult and knotty of problems.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

NEWSPAPER RECYCLING

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GEJDENSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few moments to talk about a story that was on NBC News last night concerning the buildup of newspaper in recycling centers that no longer have a market for their product.

This is at a point in time when the major cities of the United States, cities like Washington, are just beginning to do newspaper recycling. Recycling has been the key solution in the eighties, and as we head toward the nineties, for much of our garbage problem.

However, the crisis that is developing is that there is no market. What a year ago was selling for $25 and $30 a ton, recycled newspaper, now has a negative value. If the cities and towns that we represent bring a truckload of newspaper to the local recycling center, they now have to pay $25 a ton to have that paper taken from them. It is not a bad deal in the sense that oftentimes it costs $60 to $100 a ton to landfill or incinerate this paper. But there is a much better solution.

NBC News last night focused on the dilemma that this massive influx of recycled paper has created in the recycled paper market.

As I said a moment ago, from $25 to $30 a ton in value, you now have to pay $25 or $30 a ton to have the recyclers take it from you. The Boy Scouts used to pick up paper. If they did that today they would not only not make money, they would lose money.

I have introduced H.R. 1691. It is a piece of legislation that makes an agreement with the paper industry on the percentage of recycled products that the Federal Government would buy in various types of paper.

One of the problems here is that you cannot recycle each paper in the same percentage, but there are certainly uses for virtually every kind of paper.

What we say is if that percentage of paper is not met nationally as it is sold by the manufacturers, then there would be a tax on the portion that was supposed to be recycled paper and was not. That tax would be an incentive to shift from virgin material to recycled paper.

A few days ago the House passed the capital gains break, something I voted against. It is going to be another incentive to use virgin product over recycled product. Our agricultural and forest policies have incentives; our tax policies have incentives. There are direct grants from the Federal Government to turn trees into pulp.

When the Boy Scouts tried to collect old newspapers, there are no incentives. Frankly, the newspapers of this country that have done a great job in writing editorials in favor of the environment, suddenly when they get a chance to participate and support recycling of newsprint they are awfully silent.

As a matter of fact, one of them came to me and said they were concerned about the cost. Well, there is a cost in inactivity. And it is tremendous to the communities around this country.

Here we have an opportunity to help the free market work, provide an incentive to the major paper manufacturers of the world to use recycled products. The bill is 1691.

Cities and towns around this Nation know the cost. I would hope they would write to their Senators and Congressmen and ask them to give us some help with 1691 to create a more stable and strong market for recycled paper.

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert: X, XXIV,

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 29: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $1,782,271,000, of which $11,885,000 for health care for the homeless shall be available for obligation for the period October 1, 1990 through September 30, 1991

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees agree with the concern expressed by the Senate regarding the current discrepancy between the allocation of community health center funds between urban and rural centers relative to the numbers of patients served by urban and rural centers. Funds provided to community health centers should reflect accurately the location of patients served by centers unless there are compelling reasons not to allocate funds equitably between urban and rural centers. The conferees request that the Department prepare a report on the funding allocations between urban and rural community health centers, and suggest methods, if appropriate, to eliminate the current differential within two years.

The conferees have included $2,000,000 to continue the various Pacific Basin initiatives, of which $1,660,000 shall be for the Pacific Basis Medical Officers project.

The conferees have included $1,300,000 for the Native Hawaiian health care initiatives. Of the amount provided, the conferees intend $700,000 to be used for a comprehensive health care master plan, $500,000 for health professions scholarships, and $100,000 for administrative support of the Papa Ola Lokahi.

The conferees are agreed that funding for the hemophilia treatment centers program within the Special Programs of Regional and National Significance (SPRANS) in the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant shall, at a minimum, be maintained at the current level. The conferees recognize that, due to maternal income, minority status, age and educational attainment levels, the infants of public housing residents are at a greater risk of mortality and morbidity than the general population. The conferees encourage the agency to use SPRANS funds to test the effectiveness of a coordinated, "one-stop shopping" approach to the provision of pre- and post-natal care services to this population, such as that provided in the Omaha project described in the Senate report.

The conference agreement includes $4,000,000 for organ transplant activities. It is the intention of the conferees that such amount be divided as follows: $1,400,000 for support of the activities of the Organ Procurement and Transplantation Network; $1,200,000 for continued development of the scientific registry; $700,000 for the Organ Procurement Organization grant program authorized by section 371 of the Public Health Service Act; and $700,000 for the Division of Organ Transplantation.

This amount for the Division of Organ Transplantation includes funds for the study of tissue retrieval and distribution; for the Division to work with the Health Care Financing Administration to evaluate how best to enforce the routine referral program mandated by section 1138(A)(iii) of the Social Security Act; and for the development of a new program within the Division to provide needy families with information about transplantation and the resources available in each state to assist such families with the catastrophic expenses associated with transplant surgery.

The conference agreement provides $15,000000 for pediatric AIDS demonstration projects. The conferees are aware of private sector interest in the development of model pediatric consortia to provide health and social services, research and training focused on HIV infected individuals and their families and women of childbearing years. The conferees urge the agency to fund up to three such pediatric demonstrations. These demonstrations shall, to the extent possible, provide care for children and their families in the same setting. Such model consortia shall work in collaboration with the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, and the Office of Minority Health. Further, the conferees urge the agency to allocate fiscal year 1990 funds as expeditiously as possible.

The conferees have provided $17,438,000 for adult health care AIDS demonstrations. The conferees intend that projects funded in fiscal year 1989 be entitled to compete for additional funds in fiscal year 1990.

The conferees have provided $30,000,000 for the AIDS drug reimbursement program. The conferees direct the Secretary to permit the States to make available to eligible individuals therapeutics determined to prolong life or prevent the serious deterioration of health arising from AIDS or HIV infection. The conferees understand that the funding needs for the program may be greater than anticipated in this bill. Therefore, the conferees are agreed that this program will be carefully monitored with the recognition that a supplemental appropriation may be necessary to adequately fund it.

The conferees remain concerned about the price of AZT. Even with the recent price reduction by the manufacturer of the drug, AZT remains prohibitively expensive for most AIDS patients. While the conferees are providing additional funds for the AIDS drug reimbursement program, the conferees strongly urge the manufacturer of AZT to take further steps to make the drug more affordable and more widely accessible to low-income patients.

Amendment No. 30: Deletes language proposed by the House which would have placed a limitation on funding for health education and training centers.

The conferees have provided $4,000,000 for the new border health education centers program. The program, as authorized in P.L. 100-607, will fund contracts with schools of medicine and osteopathy to create health education and training centers that will improve the supply and quality of personnel providing health services along the border between the United States and Mexico and in other areas with demonstrated serious unmet health care needs. Funds are to be divided equally between border and non-border areas. It is the intent of the conferees that the funds made available for the border area initiative are to include those areas of the border states which are most severely affected by Hispanic immigration but not necessarily in close proximity to the border.

Amendment No. 31: Earmarks $4,400,000 for AIDS facilities renovations instead of $4,300,000 as proposed by the House and $4,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 32: Deletes language proposed by the Senate regarding eligibility for excellence in minority health education grants.

Amendment No. 33: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: Provided further, That of this amount, $30,000,000 is available until expended for grants to States for Human Immunodeficiency Virus drug reimbursement, pursuant to section 319 of the Public Health Service Act: Provided further, That user fees authorized by 31 U.S.C. 9701 may be credited to appropriations under this heading, notwithstanding 31 U.S.C. 3302

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees have deleted bill language overriding an across-the-board cut totalling $1,360,000 for grants to four rural hospitals. The conferees have agreed that this will be the final year of funding such grants.

VACCINE INJURY COMPENSATION

Amendment No. 34: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment which permits the Department to use trust fund monies for administrative costs.

Of the amounts provided for occupational safety and health research, $11,250,000 has been included for farm safety and health. Of that amount, under surveillance, $2,000,000 is for the farm family survey and $2,000,000 is for rural hospitals; under research, $2,000,000 if provided for Agricultural Centers, which may also provide training, and $1,000,000 is provided for lung disease; and finally, under intervention, $2,150,000 is provided for agriculture health promotion, and $2,100,000 for cancer screening. An additional amount of $250,000 is provided for the Educational Resource Centers for farm safety and health.

Within the amount provided for AIDS activities, the conference agreement includes $11,154,000 for activities for the hemophilia project, $119,402,000 for confidential counseling and testing and $14,515,000 for direct grants to minority community-based organizations.

The conferees are agreed that separate funding must be provided to any local health department which serves the largest political jurisdiction in a MSA, when such MSA reported more than 2,000 AIDS cases as of June 30, 1989, and such cases represent at least 75 percent of the AIDS cases reported in that State.

The conference agreement includes funds for the development of AIDS education programs and exhibits to be located in science museums.

Amendment No. 36: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: : Provided further, That employees of the Public Health Service, both civilian and Commissioned Officer, detailed to States or municipalities as assignees under authority of section 214 of the Public Health Service Act in the instance where in excess of 50 percent of salaries and benefits of the assignee is paid directly or indirectly by the State or municipality, and employees of the National Center for Health Statistics, who are assisting other Federal organizations on data collection and anlaysis and whose salaries are fully reimbursed by the organizations requesting the services, shall be treated as non-Federal employees for reporting purposes only;

Amendment No. 50: Appropriate $119,000,000 instead of $99,952,000 as proposed by the House and $121,116,000 as proposed by the Senate.

RESEARCH RESOURCES

Amendment No. 51: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amount stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert $354,191,000.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees are agreed that the Biological Models and Materials Resources section of the Laboratory Animal Sciences and Primate Research Program, should receive sufficient funds to significantly expand research in this area.

The conferees are concerned about the proposal to increase the current eligibility threshold from $200,000 to $500,000 and to limit institutional flexibility in the Biomedical Research Support program. Raising the threshold would result in the elimination of 40 percent of the schools of nursing, 57 percent of the optometry schools, 50 percent of the allied health schools, 18 percent of the dental schools, 17 percent of the veterinary medical schools, and 11.5 percent of the pharmacy schools from the BRSG program. The conferees direct that the impact of such proposals be evaluated and reported to the House and Senate Appropriations Committees prior to proposed implementation.

NATIONAL CENTER FOR NURSING RESEARCH

Amendment No. 52: Appropriates $33,969,000 instead of $32,696,000 as proposed by the House and $34,969,000 as proposed by the Senate. The Conferees commend the efforts of the Secretary's Commission on Nursing, as established under Public Law 92-463, to address the nursing shortage in this country. Funds have been provided to fund a Commission for a period of one year, ending September 30, 1990. The conferees also encourage the Secretary to appoint a nurse as an Assistant to the Secretary to assist in the implementation of the Commission's recommendations, and to serve as an advisor to the Secretary on health care policy matters which affect nursing.

NATIONAL CENTER FOR HUMAN GENOME RESEARCH

Amendment No. 53: Restores language included by the House but stricken by the Senate amended to appropriate $60,000,000 under a separate appropriation account for the newly established National Center from Human Genome Research instead of $62,000,000 as proposed by the House. The Senate bill did not include a separate account for this center but had included $61,847,000 for this purpose under the National Institute of General Medical Sciences.

JOHN E. FOGARTY INTERNATIONAL CENTER

Amendement No. 54: Appropriates $15,556,000 instead of $15,579,000 as proposed by the House and $15,532,000 as proposed by the Senate.

NATIONAL LIBRARY OF MEDICINE

Amendment No. 55: Appropriates $83,311,000 as proposed by the House instead of $80,729,000 as proposed by the Senate.

OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR

Amendment No. 56: Appropriates $108,987,000 instead of $106,987,000 as proposed by the House and $127,570,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees are agreed that sufficient funds up to $2,000,000 is available within the Office of the Director to establish an intramural research program on diagnostic radiology.

Amendment No. 57: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: : Provided further, That in addition, the Secretary shall transfer $15,000,000 from appropriations available to each of the Institutes which shall be available for extramural facilities construction grants if authorized in law and if awarded competitively including such amount as he may deem appropriate for research animal production facilities.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement requires the Secretary to transfer $15,000,000 from the individual institutes for the purpose of funding extramural facilities construction projects, if such projects are identified by the Director of NIH as of urgent national importance, are authorized in law and are awarded competitively. The conferees have deleted the earmarks for seven extramural construction projects as proposed by the Senate without prejudice. The conferees believe that these are meritorious projects which should be well received in the normal competitive process.

BUILDING AND FACILITIES

Amendment No. 58: Appropriates $61,600,000 instead of $81,600,000 as proposed by the House and $41,600,000 as proposed by the Senate. The conferees have provided sufficient funds for the next phase of the Child Health/Neuroscience Building.

ALCOHOL, DRUG ABUSE, AND MENTAL HEALTH ADMINISTRATION

ALCOHOL, DRUG ABUSE, AND MENTAL HEALTH

Amendment No. 59: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $1,934,177,000, of which $7,359,000 for homeless activities shall be available for obligation for the period October 1, 1990 through September 30, 1991, and

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

While the conferees encourage the National Institute of Mental Health to fund clinical training activities that include a payback requirement, the conferees do not intend that funding be limited only to activities with payback. The conferees intend, however, that the funds for clinical training be distributed on an equitable basis across the five core mental health professions. The conferees urge the Institute to give priority in awarding clinical training funds to trainees who provide service in public facilities and mental health underserved areas.

The conferees intend that up to $4,000,000 of the funds provided above the budget request for Community Support Demonstrations be used for prevention services demonstration projects, as authorized in section 520A(b) of the Public Health Service Act, and demonstration projects for the prevention of youth suicide, as authorized by section 520A(a) of the Act.

The conferees continue to be very supportive of prevention activities, noting in particular that the suicide rate for those between the ages of 15 and 24 has almost tripled during the past thirty years. Accordingly, the conferees intend that the National Institute of Mental Health significantly increase its financial commitment to prevention projects during fiscal year 1990. The Institute should submit a detailed report on this directive prior to the 1991 budget hearings.

Amendment No. 60: Deletes language proposed by the Senate that would have earmarked mental health research funds for specific populations.

The conferees have deleted without prejudice bill language earmarking funding of mental health research. The conferees direct the National Institute of Mental Health to fund not less than $7,000,000 in rural mental health research and not less than $3,000,000 in Native American mental health research in fiscal year 1990. The conferees urge the Institute to work closely with researchers in these two areas.

The conferees are aware that the University of Denver, the University of Utah, and the University of California at Berkeley have developed American Indian social work programs and would be willing to work with local tribal and urban Indian communities to determine the effectiveness of family-centered mental health services.

The conferees further encourage the Institute to establish an Office of Rural and Native American Mental Health to coordinate the research, and expect the Institute to report to the Appropriations Committees on the progress of the rural and Native American mental health research initiatives prior to the fiscal year 1991 budget hearings.

Amendment No. 61: Deletes language proposed by the Senate that would have earmarked funds for a Presidential addiction research award.

The conferees nevertheless encourage the National Institute on Drug Abuse to establish such an award within existing funds if sufficient legislative authority exists.

FEDERAL SUBSIDY FOR SAINT ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL

Amendment No. 62: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment which maintains the availability of funds previously appropriated for maintenance and administrative activities.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR HEALTH

OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR HEALTH

Amendment No. 63: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment which inserts a legal citation.

Amendment No. 64: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment amended as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $77,352,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees intend that $1,000,000 be provided to the 1989 International Winter Special Olympics Games Committee, for the purpose of supporting the 1989 International Winter Special Olympics Games.

The conference agreement includes $6,000,000 for the National Vaccine Program established under Public Law 99-660. The conferees intend these funds to support the National Vaccine Program Office ($1,500,000 and 13 FTE's) and basic and applied research and clinical trials of pertussis vaccines ($4,500,000 and 7 FTE's). Development, testing and approval of new acellular pertussis vaccines are the highest priority of the vaccine program. Neither limited fiscal resources nor limited opportunities for appropriate field testing sites should be wasted in a diffuse approach. Therefore, the conferees expect that the National Vaccine Program Interagency Group will coordinate all pertussis trials funded through the National Vaccine Program or other funding sources in the Department. In addition, by funding another trial, the conferees do not wish to impede possible approval of any acellular pertussis vaccines currently under review by the Food and Drug Administration.

In conjunction with the Decade of the Brain, commencing on January 1, 1990, the conferees direct the Assistant Secretary for Health to work with the National Academy of Sciences/Institute of Medicine to sponsor a symposium event to bring together leading scientists from all relevant disciplines to discuss the state of the art and discourse upon short- and long-term goals. Funding shall be provided from available funds, including the one-percent evaluation set-aside.

No funds are provided or to be used for the reorganization of the Public Health Service regional offices, prior to approval of a reprogramming request.

The conferees are agreed that the amounts provided for AIDS activities within the Public Health Service include funds for the Indian Health Service, not to exceed the total for these costs estimated in the President's Budget.

Amendment No. 65: Changes legal citation as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 66: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate to earmark $1,500,000 for the National Commission on Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome and $4,000,000 for the Abandoned Infants Assistance Act. These activities are funded elsewhere in the bill.

MEDICAL TREATMENT EFFECTIVENESS

Amendment No. 67: Appropriates $27,000,000 instead of $30,000,000 as proposed by the Senate and $5,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 68: Authorizes the transfer of $5,000,000 from the Medicare trust funds as proposed by the Senate instead of $15,000,000 as proposed by the House.

The conferees are agreed that both Federal and trust fund amounts are available for the full range of Medical Effectiveness Research activities.

The conferees agree that medical effectiveness studies of new and emerging technology are appropriate. The conferees are aware that such studies involving positron emission tomography can be conducted under this account.

HEALTH CARE FINANCING ADMINISTRATION

GRANTS TO STATES FOR MEDICAID

Amendment No. 69: Appropriates $30,136,654,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $29,616,497,000 as proposed by the House.

PROGRAM MANAGEMENT

Amendment No. 70: Appropriates $101,908,000 as proposed by the House instead of $102,908,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 71: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $1,917,172,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees are agreed that Medicare contractor operations shall be continued at current services levels, adjusted to reflect new responsibilities and higher workload volume in fiscal year 1990. The rate of operations should maintain payment safeguard activities commensurate with the fiscal year 1989 audit activity effort level, including claims review, and recoveries of third party liabilities.

The conferees intend that any funds included in the budget request for the implementation of the catastrophic health insurance program which may not be required for such purpose shall be made available for ongoing operations, including as a first priority Medicare payment safeguard operations.

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME PROGRAM

Amendment No. 72: Appropriates $9,098,758,000 as proposed by the House instead of $9,095,758,000 as proposed by the Senate. The conferees are agreed that not less than $3,500,000 shall be used for new outreach activities for potential Supplemental Security Income recipients particularly the elderly. The conferees encourage this initiative to include a combination of direct services and contract service with organizations such as the existing newtork of area agencies on aging and the Administration on Aging.

LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

Amendment No. 73: Provides for a limitation on trust funds of $3,837,389,000 instead of $3,833,389,000 as proposed by the House and $3,847,389,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 74: Deletes language added by the Senate which would have established a statutory requirement that the number of employees at the Social Security Administration at the end of fiscal year 1990 should not be reduced below the level in effect on September 30, 1989. The conferees are agreed, however, that the amounts in the bill should be used to at least maintain current Social Security Administration staffing levels, and to the extent possible, partially restore past reductions, particularly in field offices. The Department of Health and Human Services is therefore directed to take no action in the fiscal year 1990 which would lower end of year employment levels below the level in effect on September 30, 1989.

FAMILY SUPPORT ADMINISTRATION

LOW INCOME HOME ENERGY ASSISTANCE

Amendment No. 75: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $1,393,000,000, of which $60,000,000 shall become available for making payments on September 30, 1990

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees intend that the $60,000,000 available for payment on September 30, 1990 be accomplished in the following manner: Any State or Territory with a carryover balance on October 1, 1989 will not be provided before September 30, 1990 with that portion of its allotment for fiscal year 1990 as bears the same ratio to $60,000,000 as its carryover balance bears to the total of all the carryover balances on October 1, 1989. States which historically spend their funds earlier in the fiscal year, as evidenced by lack of fiscal year 1989 carryover, are expected to receive their full allotment at the regular time. The purpose of this is to assure that those States that do not have any carryover funds in fiscal year 1990 have their full allocation of fiscal year 1990 funds available for the winter heating season. States that have carryover or transfer funds to other programs can adjust more earily to the delayed availability of funds. Nothing in this agreement shall change the amount of funds allocated to each State and Territory under the statutory formula.

REFUGEE AND ENTRANT ASSISTANCE

Amendment No. 76: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

REFUGEE AND ENTRANT ASSISTANCE

For making payments for refugee and entrant assistance activities authorized by title IV of the Immigration and Nationality Act and section 501 of the Refugee Education Assistance Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-422), $368,822,000, of which $210,000,000 shall be available for State cash and medical assistance.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees recognize that the President's budget request for Refugee and Entrant Assistance falls well below the amount required to maintain current services. As a result, while the conference agreement provides $126,504,000 above the budget request overall, it remains $13,534,000 below the 1989 level. The conferees intend that the period of reimbursement for cash and medical assistance not fall below 12 months. Coupled with the enhanced resources provided for social services, the $210,000,000 provided for cash and medical assistance should allow sufficient time for States and voluntary agencies to provide the adjustment services necessary for refugees to achieve self-sufficiency.

The conferees intend that the funds provided in this bill for voluntary agencies should be available for fiscal year 1989, as well as 1990, costs, should that become necessary.

The conference agreement for targeted assistance includes $14,000,000 to increase the current program of support for communities which continue to be affected as a result of the massive influx of Cuban and Haitian entrants during the Mariel boatlift. This program received $10,500,000 in fiscal year 1989 and in the Senate bill.

The conferees intend that 10 percent of the total appropriated for targeted assistance be used for grants to localities most heavily impacted by the influx of refugees such as Laotian Hmong and Cambodians, including secondary migrants who entered the United States after October 1, 1989. The conferees expect these grants to be awarded to communities not presently receiving targeted assistance because of previous concentration requirements and other factors in the grant formulas, as well as those who do currently receive targeted assistance grants. These grants shall be available to assist local schools, hospitals, employment services, and other institutions.

INTERIM ASSISTANCE TO STATES FOR LEGALIZATION

Amendment No. 77: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

INTERIM ASSISTANCE TO STATES FOR LEGALIZATION

Funds appropriated for fiscal year 1990 under section 204(a)(1) of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 shall be reduced by $555,244,000: Provided, That for fiscal year 1992 $555,244,000 shall be available to States for obligation for the period October 1, 1991 through September 30, 1994 for purposes of section 204 of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 for unreimbursed costs incurred after September 30, 1989 if these costs would have been eligible for reimbursement under the original appropriation prior to the enactment of this Act.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees have agreed to shift appropriations from fiscal year 1990 to 1992 in order to more closely reflect projected outlay patterns. The conferees believe that the remaining appropriation for fiscal year 1990, when combined with the unspent appropriations from fiscal years 1988 and 1989, will be sufficient to meet the needs of State and local governments and legalized aliens in fiscal year 1990. The funds appropriated for fiscal year 1992 are made available under the same terms and conditions as they would have been in 1990.

COMMUNITY SERVICES BLOCK GRANT

Amendment No. 78: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $396,680,000, of which $8,041,000 for homeless activities shall be available for obligation for the period October 1, 1990 through September 30, 1991.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

PROGRAM ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 80: Inserts a legal citation proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 81: Appropriates $86,806,000 instead of $82,431,000 as proposed by the House and $91,181,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees intend that the $7,625,000 provided above the budget request for research and evaluation be used to initiate new projects authorized in the Family Support Act of 1988, including child access demonstrations, jobs creation demonstrations, and the national minimum benefit study.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR HUMAN DEVELOPMENT SERVICES

HUMAN DEVELOPMENT SERVICES

Amendment No. 82: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment which inserts a legal citation.

Amendment No. 83: Inserts legal citation as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 84: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment amended as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $2,784,090,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees expect the Secretary of Health and Human Services to devote $50,000,000 of the fiscal year 1990 Head Start appropriation to increasing Head Start teachers' salaries.

The conferees direct the Administration for Native Americans to allocate $1,000,000 this year to continue funding for the Native Hawaiian demonstration revolving loan program. This will complete the level of funding authorized by P.L. 100-175.

Amendment No. 85: Deletes language proposed by the Senate that would have earmarked funds for the aging outreach program, notwithstanding current law.

Amendment No. 86: Deletes appropriation of $1,200,000,000 for child care proposed by the Senate. The conferees are deferring without prejudice consideration of this program until authorizing legislation is enacted into law. Funds have been reserved for this purpose in the section 302(b) allocations.

PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR FOSTER CARE AND ADOPTION ASSISTANCE

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $1,380,048,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

It is the intention of the conferees that the Office of Human Development Services proceed to develop regulations on the collection of data on administrative costs under the foster care program. Because of the need for administrative cost data, it is expected that proposed regulations will be published for public comment no later than January 1, 1990, and issued in final form by March 1, 1990.

DEPARTMENTAL MANAGEMENT

GENERAL DEPARTMENTAL MANAGEMENT

Amendment No. 88: Appropriates $80,577,000 instead of $80,327,000 as proposed by the House and $90,577,000 as proposed by the Senate. The additional funds over the House bill are for rural transportation technical assistance and coordination.

OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR GENERAL

Amendment No. 89: Appropriates $50,600,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $49,498,000 as proposed by the House. An additional 22 FTE's are provided over the House bill.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 90: Reported in disagreement.

Amendment No. 91: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: except that this section shall not apply to funds made available for fiscal year 1990

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The agreement of the conferees deletes authority for the Secretary to make transfers between appropriation accounts during fiscal year 1990.

Amendment No. 93: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the words "Conference Center" inserted by said amendment, insert: International House

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 94: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 219. Of the funds appropriated in this Act for the National Institutes of Health, a reduction of $4,000,000 is to be applied to all appropriations as a result of improved procurement practices and a reduction of $10,000,000 is to be applied to all appropriations as a result of savings achieved under section 217 of this title.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. This language results in savings of $14 million as a result of improved procurement practices and extramural grant salary limitations at the National Institutes of Health.

Amendment No. 95: Deletes languages proposed by the Senate related to a change in the alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health block grant formula.

The conferees have deleted without prejudice a revision to section 1912A(b) of subpart I of part B of title XIX of the Public Health Service Act. The conferees are concerned about the impact of the current formula on States whose allocations have been adversely affected by the size of the formula's minimum State grant. The conferees understand that the necessary formula change is contained in the anti-drug abuse legislation passed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 96: Deletes language proposed by the Senate allowing funds from the sale of recycled solid wastes to be credited to the appropriation accounts of various agencies of the Department of Health and Human Services.

Amendment No. 97: Deletes language proposed by the Senate related to rural referral center regulations.

The conferees have deleted this provision without prejudice. The conferees understand a similar provision is pending in reconciliation legislation, which could be retroactive to the end of fiscal year 1989, thus avoiding reduction of Medicare reimbursement levels to hospitals designated as rural referral centers. In the interim, the conferees expect that no portion of the sums provided in this bill will be used to implement regulations relating to the classification of rural referral centers, until action has been completed on the fiscal year 1990 budget reconciliation legislation.

Amendment No. 98: Deletes language proposed by the Senate regarding a study of children whose mothers abused drugs during their pregnancy.

While the conferees have deleted this bill language, they nevertheless expect the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct the study described.

Amendment No. 99: Deletes language proposed by the Senate that would have required the Secretary of Health and Human Services by law to submit a report to Congress providing certain information, including budgetary information, and on the 20 illnesses that are the leading causes of death in the United States. The conferees believe however that such a report is necessary and direct the Secretary to provide it prior to next year's appropriations hearings.

Amendment No. 100: Deletes language proposed by the Senate related to a Presidential award for addiction research.

Amendment No. 101: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment amended to read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 221. During the 12-month period beginning October 1, 1989, none of the funds made available under this Act may be used to impose any reductions in payment, or to seek repayment from or to withhold any payment to any State pursuant to section 427 or 471 of the Social Security Act, as a result of a disallowance determination made in connection with a compliance review for any Federal fiscal year preceding Federal fiscal year 1990, until all judicial proceedings, including appeals, relating to such disallowance determination have been finally concluded, nor may such funds be used to conduct further compliance reviews with respect to any State which is a party to such judicial proceeding until such proceeding has been finally concluded.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This amendment inserts language which establishes a one-year moratorium on the assessment of penalties under Federal foster care programs.

TITLE III—DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

COMPENSATORY EDUCATION FOR THE DISADVANTAGED

Amendment No. 102: Appropriates $5,434,777,000 instead of $5,580,069,000 as proposed by the House and instead of $5,080,762,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 103: Provides that $5,408,581,000 of funds appropriated to this account will become available on July 1, 1990 and remain available until September 30, 1991 instead of $5,559,177,000 as proposed by the House and instead of $5,052,262,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 104: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: Provided, That $4,427,250,000 shall be available for basic grants under section 1005, $400,000,000 shall be available for concentration grants under section 1006, $285,938,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. This language earmarks specific amounts for basic grants, concentration grants and migrant education.

Amendment No. 105: Deletes language proposed by the House related to migrant education. This issue has been dealt with under amendment No. 104.

Amendment No. 106: Earmarks $33,197,000 for neglected and delinquent programs instead of $34,778,000 as proposed by the House and instead of $31,616,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 107: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have earmarked specific amounts for state administration and program improvement programs. The conference agreement allows these funds to be allocated in conformance with the basic law.

Amendment No. 108: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate amended as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: Provided further, That no State shall receive less than $340,000 from the amounts made available under this appropriation for concentration grants under section 1006: Provided further, That no State shall receive less than $375,000 from the amounts made available under this appropriation for State administration grants under section 1404

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The conference agreement inserts language proposed by the Senate which provides for a minimum State grant under the concentration grant program of $340,000. Identical language was included in the fiscal year 1989 appropriation for this program. The agreement also inserts a new provision setting a minimum grant for State administration grants of $375,000.

Amendment No. 110: Modifies language proposed by the House but stricken by the Senate by permitting the transfer of not to exceed $125,000,000 for a new Merit Schools program and not to exceed $50,000,000 for a new Magnet Schools of Excellence program only if such programs are specifically authorized in law prior to March 1, 1990. The House bill would have allowed $350,000,000 to be transferred for these purposes. This action is not intended as a statement of support for these new programs. The decision regarding authorization of these initiatives should be made through the normal legislative process.

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: ; $8,892,000 shall be for national program activities under section 2012 and $128,440,000 shall be for State grants under part A of title II of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act; $3,964,000 shall be for grants for schools and teachers under subpart 1 and $4,500,000 shall be for family school partnerships under subpart 2 of part B of title III of Public Law 100-297; and $31,084,000 shall be for national programs under part A of chapter 2 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference modifies four earmarks of funds inserted by the Senate. These amounts relate to the Dwight D. Eisenhower Math and Science program and to the Fund for Improvement of Education and Reform of Schools and Teachers. The conference agreement also includes a new earmark of $31,084,000 for national programs under chapter 2. The House bill included no similar provisions.

The conference agreement includes $15,000,000 for new star schools grants in fiscal year 1990. The conferees expect the Secretary, in awarding new awards under the Star Schools Act, to adhere to the provisions of section 905(c)(3) of that Act and give a priority to telecommunication partnerships that serve schools with a significant number of students eligible for chapter 1 services.

The conferees direct that funds provided for the Fund for Innovation in Education be allocated as follows:

Discretionary Activities (sec. 4601)	$6,928,000
Technology Education (sec. 4603 and sec. 6115)	2,250,000
Computer-based Education (sec. 4604)	5,000,000
Comprehensive School Health (sec. 4605)	4,000,000
Total	18,178,000

The conferees expect that not less than $3,000,000 of the funds available for discretionary activities (sec. 4601) be used for the initiative to improve the educational performance and employment opportunities of "underachieving" students cited in the House report accompanying the bill. The conferees further expect that within the amount made available for federal activities under the Drug Free Schools national programs activity, $500,000 should be used for innovative alcohol abuse education programs and administered as if appropriated under sec. 4607.

The conferees wish to make clear that the training and advisory services authorized by title IV of the Civil Rights Act will provide grants to 10 regional desegregation assistance centers and to civil rights units in State education agencies to enable them to assist school districts to address the problems associated with desegregation on the basis of race, sex, and national origin.

The conferees expect that the $6,500,000 appropriated for the Native Hawaiian Education Act be allocated as follows:

Model Curriculum Implementation Project	$500,000

Amendment No. 122: Earmarks $31,913,000 for bilingual education training activities instead of $32,413,000 as proposed by the House and instead of $31,413,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 123: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: including not more than $2,000,000 for the support of not to exceed 200 fellowships under section 7043

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement modifies Senate language to earmark $2,000,000 for fellowships under the bilingual education program instead of $1,500,000. The conference agreement also specifies that this will support approximately 200 trainees. The House bill included no similar provision.

EDUCATION FOR THE HANDICAPPED

Amendment No. 124: Appropriates $2,083,776,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $2,063,827,000 as proposed by the House. The conference agreement reallocates handicapped funds in compliance with authorization ceilings in the basic law.

The conferees are agreed that the Secretary may use up to $1 million to support the development of descriptive video services for the blind if his study of this technology, which has been requested in H. Rept. 101-172, determines that the technology is commercially viable and that there is no significant opposition from the Federal Communications Commission. Should these conditions not be met, the conferences are agreed that these funds should be redirected towards other media and captioning activities unless a separate authorization for such a program is enacted into law.

The conferees intend that of the total amount provided for postsecondary programs, $2.5 million be allocated to the four postsecondary education programs serving the deaf.

Amendment No. 125: Earmarks, $1,564,017,000 for State grants as proposed by the House instead of $1,554,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees have provided an increase in funding for the National Institute on Disability and Rehabilitation Research. It is the intention of the conferees that NIDRR establish a new research and training center dealing with the needs of low-functioning deaf individuals.

The conferees are also agreed that a portion of the increase provided to the National Institute on Disability and Rehabilitation Research should be used to develop improved prosthetic and orthotic devices using new technologies.

Amendment No. 129: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which earmarks $32,674,000 for special demonstration programs instead of $31,994,000 as proposed by the House and instead of $17,674,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will offer a motion to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 130: Restores language included by the House but stricken by Senate earmarking $15,000,000 for comprehensive head injury centers.

The conferees note that more than 100,000 people die each year as a result of head injury, while another 70,000 to 90,000 people are permanently disabled. The Iowa Brain Injury Registry indicates over 10,000 head injuries occur in Iowa each year. Similar data are available for the State of Alabama. The conferees encourage the Department to consider those areas of high incidence of head injuries when making its awards for head-injury centers.

SPECIAL INSTITUTIONS FOR THE HANDICAPPED

AMERICAN PRINTING HOUSE FOR THE BLIND

Amendment No. 131: Appropriates $5,740,000 instead of $5,537,000 as proposed by the House and $5,492,000 as proposed by the Senate.

NATIONAL TECHNICAL INSTITUTE FOR THE DEAF

Amendment No. 132: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendent, insert the following:

For the National Technical Institute for the Deaf under titles II and IV of the Education of the Deaf Act of 1986 (20 U.S.C. 4301 et seq.) and for activities under sec. 311 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, $36,553,000 of which $250,000 shall be for the endowment program as authorized under section 408 and shall be available until expended, $482,000 shall be for construction and renovation, to remain available until expended, and $900,000 shall be retained by the Secretary for the purpose of supporting a consortium of institutions to provide education and vocational rehabilitation services for low functioning adults who are deaf.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement appropriates $36,553,000 instead of $35,553,000 as proposed by the House and instead of $37,553,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement modifies language inserted by the Senate to make clear that funds are available for a new program of consortia to provide educational and vocational rehabilitation services for low functioning deaf adults. The conference agreement deletes Senate language which would have earmarked these funds for certain institutions. It is the intention of the conferees, however, that funds be allocated for one or more awards for demonstration projects across the country. The conferees note that California State University at Northridge, Gallaudet University, National Technical Institute for the Deaf, Postsecondary Education Consortium at the University of Tennessee, Seattle Central Community College, Southwest Center for the Hearing Impaired, and St. Paul Technical Institute have expertise in these areas.

The conferees direct the Secretary to grant the approval for the National Technical Institute for the Deaf to admit foreign students and that such students should pay a 50-percent tuition surcharge. The conferees intend this foreign student tuition surcharge be the same 50-percent rate for Gallaudet University and Howard University. Finally, the conferees also agree that NTID, Gallaudet University, and Howard University should have the opportunity to phase in the surcharge over a 3-year period.

Amendment No. 135: Earmarks $23,333,000 for national programs instead of $26,639,000 as proposed by the House and instead of $19,465,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 136: Earmarks $7,083,000 for research instead of $7,200,000 as proposed by the House and instead of $6,965,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 137: Earmarks $11,250,000 for demonstrations instead of $15,000,000 as proposed by the House and instead of $7,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 139: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert the following: $6,044,097,000 together with an additional $131,000,000 which shall be available only for unfinanced costs in the 1989-90 award year Pell Grant program: Provided, That $286,000,000 shall only be available if such funds are necessary to pay a maximum grant of $2,300 during the 1990-1991 program year: Provided further, That notwithstanding section 479A of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.), student financial aid administrators shall be authorized, on the basis of adequate documentation, to make necessary adjustments to the cost of attendance and expected student or parent contribution (or both) and to use supplementary information about the financial status or personal circumstances of eligible applicants only for purposes of selecting recipients and determining the amount of awards under subpart 2 of part A, and parts B, C, and E of title IV of the Act: Provided further, That notwithstanding section 411(b)(6)(B) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 as amended, no basic grant under subpart 1 of part A of title IV of that Act shall be awarded to any student who is attending on a less than half-time basis for a period of enrollment beginning on or after January 1, 1990, except that any such student who received a basic grant for a period of enrollment beginning before January 1, 1990, shall be eligible to receive a basic grant for a period of enrollment beginning on or after such date from funds appropriated for fiscal year 1989: Provided further, That notwithstanding section 411(b)(6)(B) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 as amended, no basic grant under subpart 1 of part A of title IV of that Act shall be awarded from funds appropriated for fiscal year 1990 to any student who is attending on a less than half-time basis: Provided further, That any institution participating in any loan program authorized under part B of title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965 as amended, with a default rate, as determined by the Secretary, that exceeds 30 percent shall implement a pro rata refund policy that complies with minimum standards established by the Secretary in regulations, for any title IV aid recipient who withdraws before the earlier of six months from the beginning of the course of study for which the loan was received, or the date on which the student completes one-half of that course and these provisos, except as specifically indicated, shall apply to all fiscal year 1990 funds

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement departs from the structure of the House and Senate bill by providing a combination of additional appropriations and legislative modifications in response to radically revised cost estimates generated by the Administration for the Pell Grant program. The President submitted a revised budget request for this program on July 25, 1989 adjusting his estimate of program costs upward by an additional $696 million. This new estimate included $331 million for a perceived shortfall in fiscal year 1989 and $365 million as a reestimate for 1990 program costs. Because of the extreme fluctuations in these estimates, the Senate Committee asked the Comptroller General to review the Administration's estimating procedures as well as the accuracy of its budget requests. The conferees look forward to reviewing this report in January of 1990.

On September 29, 1989, however, after a series of messages on this matter, some of which were confusing and contradictory, the Office of Management and Budget informed the Congress that if additional funds were not explicitly provided for fiscal year 1989 in the regular 1990 appropriations bill, the Administration would immediately seek to recover all or part of Pell Grants already awarded to 1.4 million students for the 1989/1990 academic year. Cost estimates calculated by the Congressional Budget Office, on the other hand, indicate a 1989 funding shortfall of not more than $131 million and that program costs for 1990 are likely to be up to $300 million less than the revised budget estimate submitted by the Administration.

Based on this information, the conferees have provided an immediate appropriation of $131 million to cover the funding shortfall for the 1989/1990 academic year. Although the conferees have provided explicit legislative authority for the use of funds for the 1989 shortfall, the conferees do not necessarily concur in OMB's view that this language is necessary in order for funds to be used for this purpose. The conferees note that OMB's policy differs substantially from previous Administration practice in handling the financing of current year shortfalls. As a result of this 1989 appropriation and some 1989 savings achieved through the provisions cited below, the conferees consider any attempt to impose a linear reduction of Pell Grant awards in the current academic year to be both unacceptable and unnecessary.

The conference agreement also includes the following legislative actions intended to deal with the Pell Grant funding problem:

Legislative language identical to current law limiting the discretion of student aid administrators in adjusting Pell Grant awards at the campus level;

Legislative language implementing the Administration's proposal for the implementation of pro-rata refund policies at postsecondary institutions with loan default rates in excess of 30 percent;

Legislative language delaying the eligibility of students attending on a less than half time basis for Pell Grant awards. An exception will be made for the 1989/1990 award year for less than half time students that have been awarded a Pell Grant for a period of enrollment beginning prior to January 1, 1990.

The conferees have agreed to these legislative changes reluctantly because of jurisdictional concerns but consider these provisions to be reasonable ones which are directed at recognized problems which contribute to the funding difficulties with the Pell Grant program.

GUARANTEED STUDENT LOANS

Amendment No. 140: Appropriates $3,826,314,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $3,651,000,000 as proposed by the House.

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: for titles I, III, IV, section 501, 523, and subpart 1 of part D of title V, and titles XII,

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 143: Appropriates $632,736,000 instead of $634,976,000 as proposed by the House and instead of $620,711,000 as proposed by the Senate. The conference agreement includes $245,000,000 for special programs for the disadvantaged, TRIO. In allocating these funds, the conferees direct the Secretary to implement the language in the House report relating to Upward Bound, by using $7,000,000 of the increase provided in this account to fund an additional 25 applications from those already approved, but unfunded, in the recently-held competition.

The conferees also expect that within the amount made available for School, College, University Partnerships program, not less than $400,000 shall be used for a competition based on the initiative described in the Senate report accompanying the bill.

Within the amount made available for international education domestic programs, the conferees expect that not less than $5,000,000 shall be available for the international business education centers initiative authorized under section 6261 of the Omnibus Trade Act of 1988. The conferees note that a much smaller sum was competed under this program in fiscal year 1989 and that the authorizing statute does not prohibit the 1989 grantees from competing for an expanded level of support in 1990. The conferees expect continuing projects to be considered on an equal basis with new applications in the competition for 1990 funds and do not intend that any continuation grant would be automatically reduced in its second year.

Funds available to the various activities at Howard University may be reprogrammed if approved by the House and Senate Appropriations Committees using the normal reprogramming procedures.

The conference agreement provides for a 50 percent tuition surcharge for foreign students which is to be phased in over a three year period. The conferees expect the Secretary of Education, in concert with the appropriate University authorities, to submit a plan to the House and Senate Appropriations Committees no later than January 1, 1990 describing the procedures for implementation of this surcharge.

Amendment No. 148: Earmarks $1,500,000 for the endowment program instead of $7,458,000 as proposed by the House and instead of $1,482,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement includes $5,000,000 for the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards. These funds are provided contingent on the enactment of legislation authorizing this appropriation to the Board. These funds are to remain available for this purpose through the entire fiscal year and may not be used for any other purpose unless a transfer of these funds is approved in writing by the House and Senate Appropriations Committees through the normal reprogramming process.

Amendment No. 151: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have earmarked funds in statute for the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards. The conference agreement provides $5 million subject to authorization.

The House bill did not provide funds for this activity.

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 172: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment amended as follows:

In lieu of the "$28,643,000" named in said amendment, insert the following: "$26,643,000"

In lieu of the $91,037,000" named in said amendment, insert the following: "$85,637,000"

In lieu of the "$45,415,000" named in said amendment, insert the following: "$41,565,000"

The conference agreement places a ceiling on the amounts available to the three Cabinet Departments for advisory or assistance services. It also establishes reporting requirements and provides for Comptroller General review of the reports.

Amendment No. 173: Deletes language proposed by the Senate relating to "good faith" efforts of spousal notification. This provision is unnecessary inasmuch as the Centers for Disease Control currently requires that a "good faith" effort be made to notify the spouse of an AIDS-infected patient.

However, the conferees direct further that none of the funds provided to the Centers for Disease Control for prevention and surveillance projects regarding AIDS, shall be provided in any State unless the chief executive officer of such State provides prior written assurances to the Secretary of Health and Human Services that, with respect to such programs, such State has established standards and procedures for "a good faith" effort for confidential notification of spouses of persons with HIV infection.

Amendment No. 174: Deletes language proposed by the Senate related to restrictions on health education materials issued by agencies or grantees funded in the bill.

SEC. 518. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, funds appropriated for salaries and expenses of the Department of Health and Human Services are hereby reduced by $15,000,000: Provided, That no trust fund limitation shall be reduced.

SENATE—Friday, October 6, 1989

(Legislative day of Monday, September 18, 1989)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgements, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? Or who hath been his counsellor? Or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

Sovereign Lord who made everything out of nothing, from whom and for whom are all things, manifest Thy presence in this place today. May special blessing rest upon Senators and staff who have worked so hard. Thank Thee for the special reality that is the United States. "Out of Many One." "E Pluribus Unum."

We thank Thee for our diversity and our unity, for diversity which prevents unity from becoming uniformity, for unity which prevents diversity from becoming anarchy. Save us, Lord, from both extremes. And as the Senate, which models the unity of America, functions today, grant that whatever prevents this reality be removed, that Thy will be done on Earth as it is in Heaven.

For the glory of God and the sake of the Nation. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, following the time for the two leaders, there will be a period for morning business until 10:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

At 10:30, the Senate will begin consideration of S. 1726, the catastrophic insurance reform bill, under the provisions of the unanimous-consent agreement granted last evening. I will not restate the agreement. It is lengthy and can be found on page 2 of the Senate Legislative Calendar.

There will be rollcall votes relative to the catastrophic bill throughout the day. We will continue in session until action on that legislation is completed today. Then as soon as possible thereafter we will take up the reconciliation bill.

Mr. President, on Wednesday I announced the schedule for the remainder of this week and for next week. I stressed, and repeated several times during my remarks, and repeat now, so that there can be no misunderstanding, that we will remain in session this week until such time as we complete action on the reconciliation bill. That means today, Friday; tomorrow, Saturday; and the following day, Sunday, if necessary.

If we are unable to complete action on the reconciliation bill by the close of business on Sunday, then, Mr. President, the Senate will return to session next Tuesday to resume deliberations on the reconciliation bill and will remain on that bill until action is complete. We simply have no other alternative.

If we complete action on the reconciliation bill at any time prior to the close of business Sunday, then the Senate will not be in session on Monday or Tuesday, and will be in session on Wednesday with no rollcall votes. So I now have said that publicly several times, privately several dozen times, and I repeat it again, so that the Senators cannot possibly have any misunderstanding as to what the schedule will be.

We must complete action on the reconciliation bill as soon as possible. If we do so by the close of business Sunday, we will not be in session on Monday or Tuesday, and we will be in session, but without rollcall votes, on Wednesday.

If we fail to complete action on the reconciliation bill by the close of business Sunday, then we will not be in session Monday, but will return to session on Tuesday and continue until such time as we do complete action on the reconciliation bill.

I thank my colleagues for their cooperation and patience in this regard.

THE EXODUS OF EAST GERMAN CITIZENS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, we are deeply moved by the enormous efforts made by tens of thousands of East Germans who hope to begin a new life in the West. At great personal cost—in some cases, high risk—these individuals are acting upon the universal desire for economic and political freedom.

The recent exodus from East Germany represents the symbolic destruction of the wall dividing East and West. While governments can attempt to enforce physical and political barriers, the East German people have by their actions declared those barriers illegitimate and void.

It is their Government's reluctance to provide these freedoms that leads the East Germans to seek such freedoms elsewhere. Unlike some of its neighbors in Eastern Europe, the German Democratic Republic refuses to acknowledge the popular desire for economic and political reform. As a result, the country has become increasingly isolated and its people increasingly desperate.

The desperation of East German citizens is borne of a lack of hope for change within their own country.

Closing borders cannot solve this problem. The East German Government must recognize this fact.

The Government must finally accept that the most appropriate and effective way to stem the tide of emigration is to provide hope to the people of East Germany.

As the Governments of Poland and Hungary have realized, this requires a willingness to provide the liberties and freedoms that people throughout the world demand.

I hope that President Bush will speak out in support of this need for change in East Germany. I hope the President will give voice to the empathy all Americans have for the hopes and desires of the East German peoples.

The President has enormous power to speak for all Americans and represent our views within the international community. We cannot be silent. The East German Government should hear our urging that its people be given reason for hope, reason to believe that opportunity and liberty can soon be found in their own land.

I hope that when President Gorbachev visits East Germany this weekend, he will work to convince the authorities there that closing borders and denying visas cannot contain aspirations for a better life.

I urge President Gorbachev to help the East German Government understand the need for concrete and meaningful steps that will offer hope to the people who now despair. Surely President Gorbachev understands this need based on his own experience. He should demonstrate that the principles he attempts to uphold in the Soviet Union hold good for the rest of Eastern Europe.

I also call upon the Soviet President to demonstrate tangibly that his support for the freedom of emigration is not limited to the Soviet Union alone. I urge him to work to influence his East German ally to make the freedom of emigration real for the people of East Germany, while simultaneously making the desire and need for emigration ultimately disappear.

Self-interest and justice demand that the German Democratic Republic address the underlying problem of which the exodus of its own people is but a symptom.

Mr. President, 35 years ago I was in West Berlin. I there served as a military intelligence officer at a refugee camp, which then received over 3,000 refugees a week from East Germany to Czechoslovakia and Poland. It was that exodus which led to the construction of the Berlin wall, a pathetic admission of failure by a government which had to erect barriers to contain its own citizens.

For nearly 35 years, that wall has stood as an insult to every concept of justice and freedom. We have come full circle, and we see that by their actions, the people of East Germany have symbolically torn down that wall. They have made clear that physical barriers cannot prevent people from seeking freedom.

People the world over want freedom and economic opportunity. We must give voice to their aspirations because it is here in the home of democracy, in the home of freedom and economic opportunity, to which people look for leadership.

I urge the President to speak out on this issue and I especially urge President Gorbachev, who says he wants reform, to make good on his word. I challenge the East German leadership to do what the Soviets claim they want to do in their society, what the Poles and Hungarians and others are doing, and call upon them to destroy that wall, tear down the barriers, give their people the freedom and economic opportunity that they want as do people the world over.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time and also reserve the time of the distinguished Republican leader. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the time of the two leaders will be reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate now will proceed with a period for transaction of morning business to extend not beyond the hour of 10:30 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes.

The Senator from South Carolina is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

DAY 14 IN THE WAKE OF HURRICANE HUGO

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise to speak on day 14, 2 weeks after Hurricane Hugo struck my State, yet still on day 14 we have 60,000 homeless, 150,000 without electricity, and thousands who still cannot reach their homes on various islands. I, myself, cannot drive to my home on Isle of Palms. Physically you cannot get there. The bridges are down.

On the other side of the coin, Mr. President, while the crisis continues, the generosity also continues, the tremendous outpouring of clothing, food, supplies, and cash donations from across America. We are profoundly grateful in South Carolina for this helping hand from our sister States.

We are now better able to quantify the scale and magnitude of Hugo. Yesterday, we, in the Senate, had a briefing by Continental Insurance, which estimates a total loss of at least $12 billion, $4 billion of which will be liabilities to the insurance companies. Continental says that Hurricane Hugo is the most destructive storm ever to hit the United States of America. I wondered about Camille. Continental says Hugo was three times more destructive than Camille.

Mr. President, I emphasize the enormity of Hugo because I am sad to report that the administration, specifically the infamous FEMA, has still not risen to the challenge of this unprecedented disaster. The stonewalling and foot dragging continue.

This is not the kind of urgent and generous crisis management that the Congress intended when we passed Public Law 100-707 last year. We passed that law in response to a maneuver by FEMA to cut back on the percentage of costs it absorbs when responding to a crisis. FEMA is supposed to lead in the management of a disaster. Instead, FEMA has proved to be itself a disaster.

I refer to the floor remarks of Congressman TOM RIDGE of Pennsylvania, on July 21, 1987, in the introduction of his bill, he said:

> What we say in this bill is that, from this point forward, the minimum, the floor of the Federal Government's involvement in providing public assistance based on eligible cost would be 75 percent. There is the discretion to take it to 100 percent depending on the severity of the disaster and the communities' wherewithal to pay, but that codifies something we think is essential.

Yesterday, I sent a letter to President Bush putting in writing what I have been urging for several days, that he exercise his full discretion and responsibility under this law by ordering 100 percent Federal reimbursement. Of course, the communities are helping themselves. They are not sitting around waiting for Uncle Sugar to come from Washington. But I will say unequivocally that they need and deserve 100 percent Federal reimbursement for qualifying costs.

The response locally has been dramatic and dynamic in every respect. People are banding together and helping each other. Law enforcement officers are working around the clock. St. Stephen, one community out of Charleston, had only two officers, and three police officers came in from outside the county to relieve them so they could get a night's sleep. We had police departments in Mt. Pleasant, Greenville, and across the State collecting money for their colleagues in the hardest hit counties.

Churches, temples, and civic groups all over America are responding. But, despite this outpouring of voluntary assistance, we see the negative consequences of the Federal Government's failure to declare that it will absorb 100 percent of qualified expenses under the law as intended by Congress. The result is scavanging and gouging and the escalating cost of doing things that should be accomplished with minimal cost and effort.

Specifically, we have been trying to get the military in to help clean up the debris. We could get electricity turned on for thousands, and we could clear access to more homes if we had more military expertise and manpower.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the letter I addressed to the President, as well as the letter addressed by Governor Campbell to Mayor Riley, dated October 4.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, October 5, 1989.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In order to ensure full Federal assistance in any Federal emergency or disaster, P.L. 100-707, enacted last year, provides that for repair, restoration and replacement of damaged facilities "the federal share of assistance * * * shall not be less than 75 percent." This affirmatively granted to the President the authority to approve 100% reimbursement. In further provisions of the Act, 100% of associated expenses is provided. Specifically, under Title IV, Section 402, Major Disaster Assistance Programs, the language is as follows:

"In any major disaster, the President may—

"(1) direct any Federal agency, with or without reimbursement, to utilize its authorities and the resources granted to it under Federal law (including personnel, equipment, supplies, facilities, and managerial, technical and advisory services) in support of State and local assistance efforts;

"(2) coordinate all disaster relief assistance (including voluntary assistance) provided by Federal agencies, private organization, and State and local governments;

"(3) provide technical and advisory assistance to affected State and local governments for—

"(A) the performance of essential community services;

"(B) issuance of warnings of risks and hazards;

"(C) public health and safety information, including dissemination of such information;

"(D) provision of health and safety measures; and

"(E) management, control, and reduction of immediate threats to public health and safety; and

"(4) assist State and local governments in the distribution of medicine, food, and other consumable supplies, and emergency assistance."

There is no question that the language with or without reimbursement grants the President discretion for the assumption by the Federal Government of 100% of the costs in the disaster areas of the U.S. Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico and South and North Carolina. Hurricane Hugo is the largest storm in the history of the United States. I am confident from your personal visit to South Carolina you will agree the magnitude of the disaster is beyond any local or state effort. Even at the Federal level on Day 13, ten designated disaster counties by you have yet to receive a FEMA facility. Otherwise, FEMA is demanding applications, assessments, surveys and bureaucracy. Cities, towns, counties and the state have already exhausted their financial resources.

Certainly this is a situation that calls for immediate relief to protect property, public health and safety and lessen the major impact of this catastrophe. We need manpower to help manage the volunteer contributions, to remove debris and expedite housing. The military has been yearning to join the relief effort but is prevented from doing so because at every turn there is a FEMA percentage wrangle rather than assistance. And this private contract approach is impossible—and costly. At this moment in Charleston County, South Carolina the estimation for debris removal in the unincorporated portion of the county is $9 million. Conservatively then for Charleston, North Charleston, Mount Pleasant, etc., Charleston alone would exceed $20 million for debris removal. With 24 disaster counties, the cost in South Carolina would easily exceed $200 million. Thirteen per cent of this to the State would be $26 million and 12% to the cities and towns would be $24 million. State and local governments would be spending $50 million just for debris removal—nothing constructive, not a hospital or a school repaired. But with military manpower and equipment, it can be done immediately and at one-half the cost. Already out-of-state scavengers are coming in with their exorbitant prices knowing local contractors are in no position to take the work.

The problem could be solved immediately with the exercise of your discretion to approve, as provided in the statute, all of these needs without reimbursement. Please help us. Please tell FEMA that the Federal government will assume 100% of the reimbursement of the cost for the Federal assistance to the public bodies.

Sincerely,

ERNEST F. HOLLINGS.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Columbia, SC, October 4, 1989.

Hon. JOSEPH P. RILEY, Jr.,
Mayor of Charleston, Charleston, SC.

DEAR JOE: I am in receipt of your letter concerning debris removal in the City of Charleston. In that letter, you cite health and economic reasons for requesting additional assistance in clearing your streets.

As I am sure you are aware, the City of Charleston could have and still can contract directly for assistance in this endeavor. This can be done with a 75% federal, 13% state and 12% local participating match immediately. Further, through a federal grant from the Department of Labor, you may hire workers 100% paid by the federal government to assist your regular workers. I should point out that many cities and towns are availing themselves of both of these programs.

However, you also cite the lack of technical and contract administration capability of the City of Charleston to undertake the letting of contracts to clear the debris and call upon me to get the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to perform the tasks for you.

Therefore, in order to expedite your request, I am asking FEMA to determine, as required by law, if you actually lack the technical and contract administration capability to meet the situation. Upon FEMA's determination that this is the case. I will immediately have either the State of South Carolina, through the Budget and Control Board, or the Army Corps of Engineers undertake to handle the contracts for you. The formula funding will be the same in any circumstance.

In the meantime, my office, through FEMA, authorized trucks and drivers from the Marines to assist you temporarily until contracts can be let.

Joe, I have asked FEMA to make this determination by 5:00 p.m. today, and will do all I can to assist you.

Sincerely,

CARROLL A. CAMPBELL, Jr.,
Governor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I ask unanimous consent for an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer.

Mr. President, I quote an excerpt from the letter of Governor Campbell to the mayor:

However, you also cite the lack of technical and contract administration capability of the City of Charleston to undertake the letting of contracts to clear the debris and call upon me to get the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to perform the tasks for you.

Therefore, in order to expedite your request, I am asking FEMA to determine, as required by law, if you actually lack the technical and contract administration capability to meet the situation. Upon FEMA's determination that this is the case. I will immediately have either the State of South Carolina, through the Budget and Control Board, or the Army Corps of Engineers undertake to handle the contracts for you. The formula funding will be the same in any circumstance.

That is plain and simple bureaucracy. It is a gratuitous churning out of more red tape.

The Governor cites, incidentally, 75 percent Federal funding, 13 percent, State, and 12 percent local. Yet there is no provision in the law for 13 percent State and 12 percent local funding. There is no such provision whatsoever.

The law calls for 100 percent Federal funding for this kind of disaster. So what we are seeing is FEMA's effort to chill and discourage and intimidate the local mayors. Those mayors have been working around the clock and have expended all their budget and then some. In fact they are now talking about increasing the gas tax in my State to raise revenues for Hugo. They are trying their best.

But instead of a decisive Federal response, with ample military manpower and a timely declaration that the Federal Government will assume 100 percent of qualified costs, we have stonewalling and stinginess.

As a consequence we are seeing a jackal's pack of scavengers and gougers descending on my State, demanding debris-removal contracts and so on at three and four times the legitimate price. The mayors tell me that contractors are knocking on the doors and boasting about how they made so much money on Camille, so much money down in Texas during another disaster, and so on. It is brazen exploitation of descent citizens who have been left in the lurch by FEMA and the Federal authorities.

You realize how different things might have been with a timely and assertive Federal response. You have Fort Bragg, ready to move, with ample equipment and trained manpower. You have the Corps of Engineers who, to my personal knowledge, have been at work for 2 weeks trying to help but cannot break through this bureaucracy. I lay this directly at the feet of FEMA.

That crowd put on a pusillanimous kind of news conference yesterday saying they were "third in line;" that they did not have a responsibility; that people did not understand the law. Nonsense. I have cited the law, and it is unambiguous. FEMA claims they brought the military in, yet right this minute they are blocking the military with this bureacratic obstacle course and by their failure to declare their intention to assume 100 percent of qualified costs.

Why wait for a political declaration a month from now, after there are all kinds of contracts signed, we have wasted another month and spent three times the amount of money?

This is day 14. Yet, unbelievably, there still are 10 South Carolina counties declared disasters by the President that do not have a local FEMA office. This is a pure and simple outrage.

I will list the 10 counties that have been abandoned by FEMA: Calhoun, Chester, Chesterfield, Hampton, Darlington, Dillon, Fairfield, Marion, Marlboro, and York.

Mr. President, we are getting the grand political runaround. The law is clear. Congress' intent is clear. I have asked politely for nearly a week. Where is the Federal declaration?

And St. Croix is even worse off than South Carolina. They tell me there is not a tree still standing in the Virgin Islands. And it is nearly as bad in Puerto Rico.

But instead of action we have a political flyover, a hit-and-run delivery, a Presidential photo opportunity, and then they leave and forget about South Carolina.

The President hit the ball with the declaration of a disaster, but he failed to round the bases. That is what we are begging for here today, that he follow through and galvanize FEMA.

I have had good help from the Small Business Administration. Susan Engeleiter just yesterday hired 100 experts, but she still is roadblocked in opening up offices because FEMA must authorize her. So she cannot have SBA disaster loans in those 10 counties until FEMA opens an office. Yet FEMA has the gall to hold a new conference saying they are third in line and people do not understand and FEMA's critics are too emotional.

I sit in the Senate until 3 o'clock in the morning and listen to my distinguished colleagues talk about refugees from Poland and East Germany, and so on, while we have refugees right here—honest, taxpaying Americans—who have been abandoned by their own Government, which refuses to heed the law passed right in this Congress.

And, of course, it's all too predictable that a month or two down the road we will have a belated, politically inspired declaration. But it will come too late.

I would point out that there is ample precedent for a 100-percent declaration. We did it often the Mount St. Helen's disaster, among others. So it is clear what the game is here. By flaunting the specter of 25 percent non-Federal liability, they hope to hold down the number of applications and put the mayors in total turmoil. This is a shame. Those mayors have work to do and no time for letting contracts and looking at bids. Everyone is busy rebuilding as fast as they can, and they are contending with the scavengers and gougers. The military is waiting. The commanders have told me they would welcome this, that it would be a good exercise for the Marines and the Army and the Corps of Engineers if they could get involved in South and North Carolina and do this work.

I think, Mr. President, the unnecessary waste here is best summarized by an article by Mike Royko that appeared in our Columbia State newspaper, where he said, "The people in Washington are better bailing out swindlers than basements."

He said, the trouble in Charleston is we "should have immediately incorporated Charleston and the surrounding area as a savings and loan association," and then we could have gotten $14 billion lickety-split.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Royko's article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STORM OF FEDERAL INACTION FOLLOWS IN WAKE OF HURRICANE

(By Mike Royko)

CHICAGO.— The phone range at 1 a.m. The call was from a friend with whom we had dinner only a few hours earlier. His Southern drawl was tense.

"It's gettin' worse and I think you better haul butt, right now," he said. "They're going to order the island evacuated at 6 a.m. and the traffic's gonna be a mess."

A fast wake-up coffee, clothes stuffed into suitcases, a last look from the condo balcony at the Atlantic Ocean, and we were in the car on our way to and through Charleston, S.C.

It was an eerie sight on the highway. Normally, in the middle of the night, there would be only the distant taillights of a truck or two.

But now it was like pre-dawn rush hour on Chicago's expressways. And few drivers heeded the posted speed limit.

Mighty Hugo was coming and they were, as my friend put it, hauling butt. Some peeled off for motels and hotels or homes of relatives and friends. Most just kept going.

Six hours later we were safely having breakfast in the sand hills and tall pine region of North Carolina.

The rest of that day, I had second thoughts and regrets about ducking out of Charleston. I had never seen a hurricane and it would have been exciting, as well as something to write about.

Then at midnight Hugo roared in. Television showed the quiet island I had been on. It took the most severe hit. You probably saw scenes of the big boats that were tossed ashore. I had been staying a five-minute walk from the marina.

That ended my second thoughts and regrets, I still haven't seen a hurricane, and I don't intend to.

For me, it was just the inconvenience of juggling vacation plans. But for most of those who lived or worked on that island, it was a total wipeout. Homes gone. Jobs gone. The island is still there, but not much that was on it.

The pity is that it hit those islands and Charleston, a city of charm and friendly hospitality.

While I wish no one harm, it would have been better if Hugo had stayed at sea a bit longer and whammed into Washington, D.C.

Had it done so, the lumbering, bumbling bureaucracy known as the Federal Emergency Management Agency might have been a bit more nimble in doing its job.

This is the outfit that we pay to provide various forms of help to victims of disasters.

This is also the outfit that South Carolina's Sen. Ernest Hollings called a "bunch of bureaucratic jackasses."

And with good cause. Although Washington is only a few hundred miles from Charleston, it took the bureaucrats a week to find their way down there and open an office. It took them several more days to open a few more.

Charleston asked for portable power generators. The reason should have been obvious. Vast areas were without electricity. Any boob could see that by turning on their TV sets.

Generators? The bureaucrats thumbed through their handbooks. Ah-hah! One cannot just ask Washington for portable power generators and expect to get them. You need generators? You must first prepare and submit a written assessment of the need for the generators.

People were holding candles while wading knee deep in mud in their living rooms—if they still had living rooms—but the bureaucrats wanted a written assessment of the situation.

Those who needed federal loans to repair or rebuild homes or businesses found themselves wrapped like Christmas packages in red tape.

You need a loan because the rain is coming through your roof? Or half of your restaurant has been blown into the next county? Let us thumb through the handbook. Ah, it says that you should come back in a couple of weeks and fill out some forms. And then, if you are lucky, in several more weeks you might get the loan. Until then, well, you might put a pot over your head when the rain comes through the roof.

I keep thinking of the thin waitress who told me, "If this place goes, I'm out of work and I have about a week's pay to live on." What form does she fill out? Or the gas station guy, on the wrong side of the bridge that was blown down. He said, "If it hits here, I don't know what I'm going to do." It hit there. And now he knows what he's going to do. He's going to fill out forms and wait and wait.

Well, it's probably Charleston's own fault. When they saw that Hugo was heading their way, the state should have immediately incorporated Charleston and the surrounding area as a savings and loan association.

Then it should have called Washington and said: "We are what is laughingly called a thrift institution and we have just squandered all of our assets on wine, women and song. How about bailing us out?"

They'd have had help fast. The people in Washington are better at bailing out swindlers than basements.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as if in morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For how long would the Senator like to proceed?

Mr. THURMOND. About 8 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] may proceed for 8 minutes as in morning business.

(The remarks of Mr. THURMOND pertaining to the introduction of Senate Joint Resolution 214 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

EXTENSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for morning business be extended for 5 minutes so I may proceed on a morning business subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator is recognized.

TRANSANTARCTICA EXPEDITION

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, today is day 72 for the international Transantarctica team. The team has traveled 645 miles of their 4,000-mile journey and are camped near the foot of Mount Vang.

After 10 days of uninterrupted bad weather some of the younger, less experienced dogs began to weaken. The high winds and deep snow conditions took their toll on the dogs. They are not used to sleeping and running in such extreme conditions.

The team did not want to tire the dogs out so early on the trek so 15 dogs were airlifted out Saturday to their base camp in Puntas Arenas, Chile.

Although three replacement dogs were brought in by the supply plane, the team decided to go with only two sleds.

The third sled went back to Chile with the dogs. The dogs and sled are expected to return to action in late October when the weather will be less severe. After all, it will be spring in Antarctica.

Lately, it has been the snows that have slowed the expedition, not the temperature. Over the weekend the area got nearly 4 feet of snow. That is taller than the dogs. As a result, the team could not move, even thugh the weather was crystal clear. The temperature has been a relatively warm 10 degrees above zero.

Mr. President, I have already introduced the expedition leaders of Will Steger and Jean-Louis Etienne, and the Soviet member, Victor Boyarsky. I now want to introduce Geoff Somers, the British team member. Geoff is from Keswick, England, and was invited to join the expedition largely because of his dog-handling skills and his years in Antarctica—he spent one 34-month stretch working for the British Antarctica survey. A glutton for punishment, Geoff Somers enlisted for another 9 months, after his 34-month hitch was up.

He is 39 years of age, and Geoff is an experienced Outward Bound hand, having taught courses throughout Africa and British Columbia. Born in the Sudan, he has traveled extensively around the world and endured many extremes, from being in Borneo without any water to 2 days inside an airplane cockpit in Antarctica. Yet, when asked about the challenge of dog sledding 4,000 miles across Antarctica, Geoff responded that the dog sledding was the easy part, it's the planning and logistics that was difficult.

Mr. President, as I have already indicated, the team takes very good care of their 42 dogs. Thirty-six are pulling sleds—12 to a sled. The six extra dogs are kept at the base camp. Most of the dogs are Will Steger's, but eight are from the highly respected Krabloonik in Colorado, and five are from Greenland. The Greenland huskies are direct descendants of the dogs used in Antarctica by U.S. Adm. Richard E. Byrd, who in 1929 was the first man to fly over the South Pole.

Will has been breeding and training dogs for almost 15 years at his remote wilderness cabin in northern Minnesota. His dogs are not beautiful, many have tattered ears, battered faces, and lopsided features—signs of character and experience, he calls them. The Steger dogs are called polar huskies and have the spirit of a racer, strength of a sled hauler, and loyalty of a pet.

As any dog owner knows, dogs have individual personalities. The huskies on the trip are no different. The Greenland huskies are very feisty and fight a lot. Steger compares them to rugby players. By comparison, the Colorado dogs are shy, particularly when confronted by the more aggressive dogs. They require a lot of encouragement and attention. Steger's team is a reflection of his own personality—relentless, stubborn, playful, and volatile. Their frustrations can flair into unexpected fights, and their pulling style can appear chaotic. But they never stop.

Leading Will's team is Tim, a fierce-looking black dog who is two-thirds wolf. Nearly all of the Steger dogs have wolf in their blood. Sharing the lead with Tim, is Sam. Steger adopted Sam on a training run before his 1986 North Pole trip. Sam followed Steger's team for 3 days into the Arctic until he let himself get caught and harnessed. Also on Steger's team are North Pole veterans Choochi, Hank, and Yeager—brothers and cousins who tumble together with affection 1 minute and erupt into vicious fights the next.

To prepare for the Antarctic trip, the dogs spent 3 years hauling cement, rock, sand, and other supplies at Steger's Minnesota home. Last year, they hauled 500 latrines into the Boundary Water Canoe Area Wilderness campsites in midwinter.

While in the Antarctic the dogs receive a special high-fat diet designed by Hill's Pet Products for the expedition. Called Science Diet Endurance, the 2-pound blocks of concentrated food contain 5,700 calories—three times as much a similar 90-pound house pet requires. The dogs are fed once a day at night. They will pounce on the block, eating half of it immediately. The rest will be nibbled throughout the night. For water they lick ice. At night, the dogs sleep out in the open, relying on their fur to keep warm. In addition, they will burrow into the snow for insulation. Often the team will have to use shovels to dig them out.

Mr. President, I will conclude by saying that the members of the team consider the dogs the trip's most important resource. They are so important that several weeks ago when they could not find the cache of food under the blowing snow, the team gave the dogs their own food supplies, while they, the team, went hungry.

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, we are pleased to welcome a former President in this Chamber who has now moved on to other things. We welcome the President as always. We are graced by his presence.

Mr. President, we are very happy to have you here and I know all Members join in welcoming you.

[Applause.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. DURENBERGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. George Greenberg, who is a member of my staff on detail from the Department of Health and Human Services, be given the privilege of the floor during the course of business today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that morning business be extended for 5 minutes and I be permitted to speak.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. Morning business will be extended 5 minutes. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH] will be recognized not to exceed 5 minutes, and the Senate will be in order.

BUDGET WAIVER

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, we will soon be considering the catastrophic insurance program, and at that time there will be made a motion to waive the Budget Act. Since I have to attend a meeting on reconciliation in the Finance Committee, I will make my statement on that waiver at this time.

Mr. President, we must focus on the long-range view, not the short-term view. I submit that we must look at the program's costs 5 or 10 years from now, not just next month and next year. It is clear that costs under this program will continue to rise, as we have seen with skilled nursing, and it is my belief that 5, 10 years from now this program is going to have substantial financing difficulties. We must rethink our approach. We must give the Senate the opportunity to work its will on these amendments, and that requires that we waive the Budget Act.

The catastrophic health insurance law established a self-financing mechanism to pay for the new benefits, not to provide for deficit reduction. Any benefit derived by the surplus finances should not drive our budget considerations—that is pure budget gamesmanship. We are treating these surpluses as if they were general funds, and they are not.

Indeed, it is not clear that revenues will exceed outlays in the next fiscal year under this program. We have considered such a wide range of estimates, and I do not think anyone can say with confidence what the program's costs will be next year. What we can say with confidence, however, is that repealing this program will reduce the budget deficit over the long run. And, Mr. President, let me be clear, there is one amendment which will truly repeal the catastrophic program, that is the amendment passed overwhelmingly by the other body, and that is the amendment Senator DANFORTH and I will propose today.

We are asked to make decisions about changes on soft data and bad estimates. We are constantly getting new estimates that are always going higher. To emphasize this point, let me take just a moment to recap what has happened to date with budget estimates and catastrophic.

When the original bill passed, the program was promoted as self-financing. Then last spring, we learned the program was over funded and a surplus would result. At that time, some consideration was given to reducing the surtax by one-half. Now, CBO projects a shortfall of $200 million for 1989 alone. In fact, We were told by the Congressional Budget Office that the program was going to cost $30 billion. We are now told 1 year later it is going to cost $48 billion. We were told the skilled nursing or SNIFF, benefit was going to cost $400 million in 1989; now we are told it will cost $4.4 billion for 1990 alone.

Mr. President, I support the budget waiver. We need to let the Senate work its will—to consider the long-term implications of the decisions we hope to make today.

I yield back the floor. I make a point of order that a quorum is not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A point of order is made that a quorum is not present. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL HOSTAGE AWARENESS DAY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, last evening, the Senate passed House Joint Resolution 400—a joint resolution marking October 27, 1989, as "National Hostage Awareness Day."

I want to commend the original sponsor of that legislation in the House, Congressman PAUL HENRY of Michigan, for this initiative.

This day will be a very worthwhile reminder of a major piece of unfinished business on the national agenda—the fate of the eight Americans still held hostage in Lebanon. It also serves to honor two other Americans—American Embassy Officer William Buckley and Marine Lt. Col. William Higgins—who were taken hostage while on official duty, and were subsequently murdered by their captors.

As I indicated in a "Dear Colleague" sent out earlier this week, my original intent had been to introduce an identical resolution in the Senate. But the opportunity to act on this matter immediately presented itself last evening, when we received the House version of the legislation—so we did pass it.

I want to note for the RECORD those Senators who had indicated their intention to cosponsor my joint resolution: Senators REID, D'AMATO, CONRAD, MOYNIHAN, GRASSLEY, BRADLEY, ROTH, SYMMS, PELL, and MURKOWSKI.

I know all of them join me in expressing satisfaction that the joint resolution has passed, and that the Nation will have the opportunity to mark "National Hostage Awareness Day" on October 27.

CITY YEAR

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, President Kennedy's call for all Americans to serve their country lives on through the work of citizens everywhere who volunteer their time, their ideas, and their energy to improve the life of the community. In Boston, Alan Khazei and Mike Brown are keeping that spirit alive through a program called City Year. City Year brings together Boston-area youth of diverse backgrounds who share a common commitment to meeting the greatest needs of the community. Boston has already benefited from over 13,000 hours of service through a summer pilot program. Now City Year is embarking on a full-year program with 60 young participants. A model for our National and Community Service Act of 1989, S. 1430, City Year has gained the attention of policymakers and the appreciation of the citizens of Boston. I commend Alan Khazei and Mike Brown for their vision and dedication to an ideal whose time has come again.

I ask unanimous consent that the following article from Harvard magazine be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LENDING A HAND

Thomas Jefferson had one misgiving about the proposed Constitution of the United States. It established, said Jefferson, a nation inhabited by citizens where no one could truly act as a citizen. For democracy to become a reality, Jefferson felt, access for direct involvement must be the top priority. Today, as the Constitution enters its third century, the Jeffersonian notion of civic involvement is blossoming within the greater Boston area through the efforts of Alan Khazei '83, J.D. '87, and Michael H. Brown '83, J.D. '88, co-leaders of City Year.

Khazei and Brown developed their "urban Peace Corps" to expand the concepts of citizenship and public service. Designed as a "bridge year between youth and adulthood," City Year enables 17- to 22-year-olds to contribute their perspectives and energies to public service projects. The six-week pilot program in the summer of 1988 grabbed local media attention and demonstrated that young people could make a difference in their communities—over 13,000 hours throughout twelve communities—to such projects as the Special Olympics, the Neighborhood of Affordable Housing, and the renovation of shelters for the homeless.

Since the summer program, Khazei and Brown have been preparing City Year for its first full-year stint by raising funds and promoting the program. This fall, sixty "Corps members" will serve as "service resources" for projects judged by government agencies and City Year to be in greatest need. Funding comes through the private sector. That is the potential way, say Khazei and Brown, to get everyone—not just the government—involved. "People have a common interest in making the world a better place," notes Brown. "Nine out of ten asked were willing to help."

Willing to help indeed were 150 members of the Class of '84, who worked on eleven different team projects for a half-day during reunion week. Chosen because much could be accomplished in little time, the projects ranged from sorting 18,000 pounds of food in Roxbury to sprucing up a community garden in Dorchester. This "Class Act" was organized by Christopher Rich '84 and Jonathan Wiener '84 J.D. '87, both active promoters of City Year.

The initial motivation for City Year emerged while Khazei and Brown served as congressional interns. They realized that nearly everyone within the government supported the notion of public service, but few knew how to create effective programs—so they began developing one of their own. They entered law school to get the training to enact their "entrepreneurial public service" ideas.

"City Year has learned from other public service programs, such as New York's City Volunteer Corps," asserts Khazei, "Our mission is to provide another model program." If City Year succeeds, and others in turn learn from it, perhaps the Jeffersonian dream of a civic-minded society will someday be realized.—K.E.J.

TERRY ANDERSON'S CAPTIVITY

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to bring to my colleagues' attention the fact that today is the 1,665th day that Terry Anderson has been held in captivity in Beirut.

UNIVERSITY RESEARCH FACILITIES

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the practice of making direct congressional appropriations for university research facilities projects.

In my judgment, those who oppose such projects have made, and continue to make, significant errors of fact. For example, they talk about "pork barrel science." I think they are mistaken when they use that term. Directly funded research facilities projects help to broaden the knowledge base that is essential to the Nation's future political and economic security. They are not pork. Funds for scientific research facilities are not pork. Funds for education are not pork. Funds for advanced genetic research are not pork.

As I see it, those who oppose such projects on the grounds that they have not been subjected to peer review, or "merit review," as some like to call it, are missing the fundamental distinction between funding for individual research projects and funding for research facilities. I believe that peer review is appropriate for decisions about the funding of individual research projects. Those are highly technical decisions, and they should be made by panels of scientific experts, people with strong technical backgrounds. Decisions about the location of research facilities are another matter entirely. These decisions require a whole range of social, economic, environmental, and political judgments, and in all humility I believe that we in the U.S. Senate are more qualified to make those judgments than panels of scientific experts. Isn't that why our constituents elected us to office—to make those kind of judgments? We should not be turning them over to panels of experts, no matter how distinguished those experts might be.

One thing we can use in any debate on directly funded projects is accurate information on the existence of a peer review process in the Federal science agencies through which universities can compete for funds for research facilities. The opponents of the projects assume that such a process is fully operational and has somehow been circumvented. But that assumption is wrong. No such process is in existence at the present time, and until one is, there is nothing to circumvent.

Opponents of directly funded projects make another charge. They tell us that if Congress funds such projects we are heading down the road toward mediocrity in research. I reject that charge. I believe, on the contrary, that such projects will improve the quality of scientific research in this country. The facilities and the equipment brought into being by such projects will enable the institutions receiving them to compete more effectively for Federal research support in the future. That increased competition is not a bad thing; it's a good thing—for our scientific research effort, and for the Nation as a whole.

Mr. President, when university research facilities projects emerge from an appropriations subcommittee, they have already been carefully considered, and have been found to be worthwhile. To me, that means that such projects have in fact been subjected to a rigorous form of merit review, and have passed the test. In these circumstances, I am not about to second-guess the appropriations subcommittees, and neither should the Senate. Let me repeat: A vote for such projects is not a vote for pork or for mediocrity; it is a vote for science and for research and for education; it is a vote for a broadened and expanded and more diverse scientific research infrastructure in this country; it is a vote in the national interest.

TRIBUTE TO CHARLES MARION COOPER

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, on Tuesday of this week, those of us in the Oklahoma congressional delegation lost a valued friend and colleague—Charles Marion Cooper. For the last 6 years of his life, Charley Cooper faithfully served as a member of Representative WES WATKINS' staff. As Representative WATKINS said in his floor tribute to Charley, however, "He was more than a staffer, he was a trusted personal friend."

Words somehow seem inadequate to describe the contributions that Charley made to his State and Nation during his 63 years. He was a kind man, and had an unassuming, easy-going manner that quickly won over all those he met. Charley's good humor and commonsense approach to life were a source of inspiration and encouragement to us all.

We will all miss our friend, Charley Cooper. Our heartfelt prayers and sympathy go out to his wife, Allene. Together, they worked tirelessly on behalf of rural America. The contributions they have made will remain as a living legacy to Charley—a testimony to the good one person can accomplish during the time we each have allotted us on this Earth.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order, a point of order is now to be made.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCAIN. It is my understanding that the unanimous-consent agreement allowed for 1 hour debate on the bill to be equally divided at any time. I request to be allowed 6 or 7 minutes of my 30 minutes at this time to discuss the bill before the point of order is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. McCAIN. I thank the Chair.

Today at this session I think those who have followed the work of Congress for years would recognize that this is a moment of some import in that clearly this body will act to either dramatically restructure or repeal a benefit which was passed into law just a year ago.

On only two occasions that I know of, on rather obscure bills that entailed benefits or entitlements, has the Congress acted to either repeal or dramatically modify. We all know of the action of the House of Representatives a couple of days ago. Mr. President, I think what we are doing today, which will result in a dramatic restructuring or a fundamental change in the catastrophic illness insurance program, should be viewed and debated with great care and consideration, because as we fix a problem that we created, I think it is of utmost importance that we not create another problem which a year from now we may have to come back and repair.

Mr. President, my modification basically contains the following provisions which I will briefly run through and we will be debating and discussing at length later on.

The benefits that are retained are the core catastrophic benefits; long-term hospitalization protection, spousal impoverishment protection, Medicaid buy-in, and the pregnant mothers and infants program. It retains other benefits such as the blood deductible, home health, respite, mammography screening, a 1-year delay in implementation—the so-called Mitchell drugs, which is 1-year delay in implementation, and hospice. It repeals skilled nursing facility benefits, which would return to its form prior to the passage of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, and for those stays after November 1. For those stays prior to November 1, they would receive the benefit under the terms of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. The terms of the prior law were 3-day prior hospitalization, beneficiary copayment from day 21 until the end of coverage, and a 100-day limit on coverage.

This legislation instructs the Secretary of Health and Human Services to study what led to the problem with the skilled nursing benefit costs and report to Congress by March 1, 1990, its findings as well as any recommendations for future changes of this benefit.

This legislation also repeals the outpatient drug prescription program beyond the so-called Mitchell drugs and the part B out of pocket. It retains the existing flat part B premium and it repeals the surtax.

Mr. President, it repeals the surtax. The surtax is the object of the anger and ire of seniors in America. I believe they deserve catastrophic illness coverage, they deserve protection against spousal impoverishment and they deserve other programs that we could provide them with the $4.90 that they are presently paying in Medicare part B.

Mr. President, this is not underfunded. I repeat, this is not underfunded and we have CBO numbers which I would be glad to provide to any Member of this body that indicate that is the case.

Also, the administration's position on this bill will be as follows. This is in a letter that I received from Mr. Dick Darman yesterday, and it says that the administration has no, repeat no, position on this issue. I will quote:

Nothing in this letter should be construed as an expression for or opposition to one catastrophic illness substantive amendment as opposed to another. Indeed, the administration is not taking an official position in favor of any one of the competing catastrophic illness health insurance substantive amendments as opposed to the others.

He also states that because of several technical changes that have taken place as of October 1, the administration will not advise that that will trigger sequester.

Mr. President, there is one major difference between what I have presented at the desk and every other amendment that will be before this body today, one major crucial difference, and that is this legislation is supported by every single seniors organization in America with the exception of one, and that is the AARP, which we all know is involved in the prescription drug business, which has clearly a vested interest in this legislation. I repeat, this modification is supported by every senior citizens organization in America, and, Mr. President, I strongly urge my colleagues not to repeal this legislation. Let us save some benefits for seniors that they can pay for with their $4.90 that they are presently paying.

For goodness sake, let us retain the surtax because if we retain the surtax with the dramatic growth in the escalation of the cost in the programs they will be right back in the same box we placed them in just a short time ago.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCAIN. I am glad to yield to my good friend from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. When the Senator said his proposal was not underfunded, I assume what he means is the law is on the books that he intends to modify substantially here and repeal portions of that. According to CBO, with all the taxes including the surtax, it is $600 million short in 1991, it is $3.5 billion short in 1992, and $3.9 billion short in 1993.

Frankly, the Senator from New Mexico thinks those are low but when the Senator from Arizona says his is not underfunded, he is saying in these years and future years his bill is crafted where the same people that estimate this deficiency, this deficit, these red lines go away and his program pays for itself.

Is that essentially what is "being funded" means?

Mr. McCAIN. The Senator from New Mexico is correct.

By the way, those are numbers which should be viewed by everyone as to the dramatic cost escalations.

I say to my friend from New Mexico that under my proposal the difference between revenues and costs for the year 1991 would be a surplus of $927 million, for 1992 it would be $1.5 billion, and for 1993 it would be $1.8 billion as opposed to that the Senator from New Mexico is reading there.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I will reserve the remainder of my time.

But let me say briefly that I hope my colleagues will pay close attention to the votes today, and the amendments because we cannot make the same mistakes we made a year ago. We owe it to the seniors of this country to address this.

I am very pleased that we have the opportunity to view a wide variety of options in order that we might give full ventilation to all points of view.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McCAIN. Yes. I yield to my friend from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the Senator.

I read in the paper this morning that Mr. Sullivan, the Health and Human Services Secretary, had endorsed the proposal by Senator DURENBERGER.

I just raise that question so we can get a clarification.

I heard the Senator from Arizona indicate that the administration, through a letter from OMB Chief Richard Darman, had indicated that the administration had not taken that position. But in this morning's Washington Post it indicates that Sullivan endorsed a proposal by Senator DURENBERGER to save most of the major benefits. To quote, in a letter to Senator BENTSEN, Sullivan said:

I believe the House action yesterday will be regretted. * * * It is critical that we preserve a catastrophic program that offers financial protection to the millions of Americans who do not have this protection. I am ware that Senator DURENBERGER has a compromise that incorporates our mutual priorities.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I am glad to respond to my friend from North Dakota, who has been heavily involved in this issue. I am deeply appreciative of all of his involvement, and concern in this area.

The letter from Darman was in direct response to what Sullivan did. He told me on the phone that Sullivan was speaking for himself, and he sent me this letter within an hour that said indeed the administration—not Mr. Darman—the administration is not making an official position in favor of any one of the competing CHI substantive amendments as opposed to the others.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this letter be made a part of the RECORD.

There being no objective, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, October 5, 1989.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN. We understand that you intend to offer an amendment to legislation pending in the Senate that would modify the Catastrophic Health Insurance (CHI) program.

You have provided us a copy of your amendment (description attached) and asked whether or not adoption of your amendment would yield a revised G-R-H deficit estimate that would require sequester. As we approach the crucial October 15 deadline, there are several new elements in the calculus that I would call to your attention. The DOD paydate shift, which had been a subject of dispute, has now been overtaken by events. It has already taken place. In addition, the House includes Medicare scoring language, which we did not support but which is now moving forward in the reconciliation bill. If enacted, this language would direct us to score certain shifts in Medicare payments between fiscal years that we would otherwise be prohibited from scoring. And if the emerging reconciliation bill, including the language dealing with the scoring of Medicare payment shifts, is enacted, our current estimate of the G-R-H baseline deficit would be reduced by approximately $12 billion. This would then yield a revised G-R-H deficit estimate that could accommodate your amendment without triggering sequester.

Let me be clear: This CHI amendment would unquestionably have a serious adverse effect on the actual fiscal year 1990 deficit. But in view of the scoring issues I've noted, it is now the case that your CHI amendment would not trigger a sequester if reconciliation, including the Medicare payment shift language, continues on its present course, and is passed by the Congress and signed by the President before October 16th.

I write this letter in response to your inquiry on this matter. Nothing in this letter should be construed as an expression of support for or opposition to one CHI substantive amendment as opposed to another. Indeed, the Administration is not taking an official position in favor of any one of the competing CHI substantive amendments as opposed to the others. The purpose of this letter is to report on the relationship of scoring issues to a possible sequester—as currently estimated—and to clarify that we are not officially choosing among the competing CHI substantive amendments.

With best regards,

RICHARD G. DARMAN.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I reserve my time.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield for a question?

Mr. McCAIN. I would like to do that later. I am running out of my 30 minutes. I will be glad to do it under the point of order that is going to be raised to waive the Budget Act. We can discuss it at that time.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, in accordance with the consent agreement on this bill, I make a point of order that the bill violates section 311(a) of the Budget Act.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order, either Mr. DOMENICI or Mr. McCAIN will be recognized to move to waive.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act, I move to waive titles III and IV for purposes of consideration of the pending bill and all amendments under the unanimous-consent agreement of October 5, 1989.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive the Budget Act. There is 1 hour.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry: under the order how much time is allotted for the consideration of the motion to waive?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. 1 hour.

Mr. DOMENICI. Under whose control is the 1 hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The mover and the manager in opposition.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I want to say I do not intend to take very long. On the other hand there may be others who would like to argue on this side.

I ask unanimous consent that control of my motion when I am finished be given to the distinguished Senator from Arizona who is managing the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the Budget Act of the United States is intended to protect the budget not just in 1 year but over the long run. Over the long run the catastrophic health law which we in the U.S. Senate today, the McCain amendment and other amendments that might be considered, including repeal, seek to modify, change, or repeal, a catastrophic health insurance law on the books of the United States, essentially will cost the Treasury of the United States untold billions of dollars over the years 1991, 1992, 1993, and for as far out as I can see.

Inquiring of the Senator from Arizona, Senator McCAIN, as to what he meant when he said his bill pays for itself, I used a very simple chart to explain to the Senate why we should grant a waiver and consider repeal or significant modification of the catastrophic health insurance law which is now the law of the land.

It is simple. If you have reason to use the budget law, you ought to use it to help the budget of the United States reduce its deficits, and not use it to protect a law which increases the deficit. In addition, if it is bad policy, you ought to be given an opportunity to waive the Budget Act, and consider making the policy better. We have both causes here.

These red bar graphs in this Senator's opinion—I have been at this work for awhile—are minimal explanations because I believe each of these bars will exceed CBO's estimates dramatically. And if you go out a couple more years, it will truly be a dramatic charge to the U.S. budget, thus adding to the deficit.

Interestingly enough, Mr. President, the only reason the point of order is being made is because there was an up front surplus in this catastrophic insurance that yielded unused revenues in the first year. Everybody has been counting those. So when you seek to get rid of those, you affect the budget thus needing a budget waiver. But if these three red bar graphs are anywhere close to true, and I think they are true on the low side, why should we not waive the Budget Act to try to save money for the taxpayers and the Treasury over the years 1991, 1992, and 1993, which under this very minimal estimate would be the sum total of $600 million, $3.5 and $3.9 billion. This one is going to get much bigger in 1994, so essentially, I say to my fellow Senators, if ever there was a reason to waive the Budget Act and consider a new catastrophic health bill or a modification to one or a repeal of one, it is when the law on the books of the United States spends enormous amounts of money in future years.

Why should we use the Budget Act to break the budget? Why should we use the Budget Act to not let the U.S. Senate, without a super majority, consider making a law better as to the budget?

Now, we can decide the policy, but the policy cannot get decided without 60 votes, unless you waive the Budget Act. I do not think, in my 17 years, and my 6 as chairman of the Budget Committee, the remainder, or the last year and a half as ranking member, that I have ever seen a case which cries out for using the waiver processes more than this one.

I repeat, if you use the Budget Act to cause the U.S. Senate to fail to consider modifications to an existing law, which will indeed save taxpayers dollars in the ensuing years, 1991, 1992, 1993, then of what purpose is a Budget Act?

Is a Budget Act to be so construed that it causes us to spend more money, rather than less, even when the U.S. Senate wants an opportunity to vote for less? That is the issue. I do not intend to speak any longer. Obviously, there is time on this. This is a critical vote.

If the U.S. Senate does not want to waive, we are not going to hear any policy change measures on the floor of the U.S. Senate, not only policy changes which the seniors of America want, but policy changes which will indeed help with the deficit reduction efforts, for which the Budget Act was created.

Mr. President, my last remark, and I say this because I, just 5 or 6 days ago, came to the floor of the Senate and asked the United States Senate to waive the Budget Act with reference to the reparations to the Japanese Americans who were treated improperly during the Second World War.

Well, over 60 Senators—I do not recall the number, but perhaps as many as 72 or 74, 76 U.S. Senators—voted to waive the Budget Act and create a new entitlement, because they wanted to be fair to the Japanese Americans who had been denied compensation and might be denied, unless we waived the Budget Act.

Mr. President, I joined in that because I thought it was fair and that the Budget Act should not be an instrument to be used capriciously and arbitrarily, to never grant a waiver. I say that if 70-plus Senators can waive the Budget Act for that cause, 90 Senators ought to waive the Budget Act for this cause.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me just finish.

The senior citizens of this country, interestingly enough, are saving the taxpayers of this country substantial amounts of money. I cannot believe we are going to turn this down, having granted other waivers; that, from the standpoint of helping with budget issues, is as dramatic as this and one where so many millions of senior citizens are asking us to change this law.

I am finished as far as my remarks, and I am going to yield the remainder of my time to be managed by the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

I am pleased to answer a question that the distinguished Senator from Minnesota might have.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Thank you. I address my questions to my colleague because of the respect we all have for him as the Budget Committee chairman. I am glad that he added the latter point relative to his personal feelings about the policy. Obviously, the Senator, and probably the majority of the people in this Chamber, believe that the current catastrophic legislation is not the best public policy we could enact. The Senator's particular vote on that particular issue reflects the Senator's position.

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. DURENBERGER. As long as we have known each other, am I not correct, that with your budget hat on, so to speak, that whatever you have to say to us here has not been colored in one way or other by your individual judgment on the policy, that if you speak to the issue of the red ink or the surplus, he does that on the basis of fact and not on the basis of the Senator's particular judgment about the policy; is that true?

Mr. DOMENICI. I am human, I have a conscience, and I think I am able to make judgments in my mind. So I cannot say that every time I have either asked that you waive or ask that you not waive, in my capacity as the Senator from New Mexico and chairman or ranking member of the Budget Committee, that I did not also have some policy ideas in my mind.

But, essentially, if the Senator wants to know, I believe that the time has come to reform the health care system of this country. I am not speaking now just of Medicare. I frankly do not believe the United States of America can remain a vibrant economic force in the world for a number of reasons. But strangely enough, I would put very high on the list, continued escalation of cost of health care, which are now up near 12 percent of gross national product, three times as much as the gross national product of Japan, twice as much as Canada—not quite twice, but at least 60 to 70 percent more than any of the free industrial nations—and growing at 13 to 15 percent a year. I do not believe we can maintain economic prosperity and have that kind of escalating health cost program in the country.

So I believe we certainly should remove, as soon as we can, a program which adds this kind of additional cost, that is not paid for, but rather, comes out of a general treasury, adds to the inflationary cost of health care. So that is a matter of policy, but it also is budgetary in that sense.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, may I ask another question? I asked the Senator that question not to begin debate on the health policy but to clarify the facts to the extent that the ranking member of the Budget Committee can recall them on whether or not current law as represented by the Medicare catastrophic bill creates deficits.

Now, my impression is that at the time we voted on this bill there was nobody standing up with charts such as yours, saying you have created deficit, am I correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senators please address each other in the third person through the Chair in accordance with the rules.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Am I correct in my recollection of the facts that when this bill passed the U.S. Senate, it was fully funded?

Mr. DOMENICI. I might say to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, I actually made a statement. I did not make a big to do about it, but I can go dig it up. I voted for it, but I said I have some very strong suspicions that we are underestimating the costs and that, probably, we are going to find out later that the costs exceed the moneys coming into the Treasury. But other than that, the Senator is correct; I might say, nobody knew it. At least if they knew it, nobody talked about it.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Will my colleague yield for a further question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Might I say that it is not that I do not want to answer the questions, but we want to be fair on the time. I prefer to yield the floor now. I am hoping that you can get some additional time before those who want to speak on the other side.

Mr. DURENBERGER. If you will yield for a question, you are the expert——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Please address each other in the third person.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield on the basis that he is the only one of whom I can ask these questions?

Mr. DOMENICI. I will answer one additional question. I really must say that I am being called by the Republican leader.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I thank my colleague. Again, I do not need the editorial comment. All I need is a yes or no, if that is possible.

Does my colleague recall that at the time that he voted for the passage of this bill, that the legislative authorization would fund this bill because of its construct, flat premium plus a supplemental premium, that if you follow it out until the end of this program a thousand years ago, you followed out legislative authority in that bill, that it would be fully funded, despite the concerns about the politics of it expressed by the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. DOMENICI. That was the assumption under which it was adopted. I must just repeat that we have never been right in our assumptions with reference to the cost of the health care program.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I thank my colleague.

Mr. DOMENICI. I indicate that initially Medicare was going to cost $700 million. It is now $60 billion, the same program.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a brief question before he leaves?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes, I will. If it is possible, make this the last one. I guess it is. So I will stop yielding.

Go ahead.

Mr. CONRAD. I appreciate that.

If the Senator from New Mexico will just answer, what are the budget implications for fiscal 1990 on the McCain proposal? Does the Senator have that available?

Mr. DOMENICI. I think the Senator from Arizona might have it. My recollection is it is a negative $2 billion in the first year. I believe the Senator from Minnesota will modify the number to have a current number. I think that is about right.

Mr. CONRAD. Is it correct that that would put us closer to sequester?

Mr. DOMENICI. It means $2 billion we expected to come into the Treasury as advanced funding for this program will not be there. Whether it gets us closer to a sequester depends on a lot of other things, I say to my friend.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia yields himself 7 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for 7 minutes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, this is all very interesting and very important. It is a matter of great debate and enormous introspection. We are, as the Senator from New Mexico indicated, at a very important point.

The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act, the people need to understand, is the most sweeping expansion of benefits in the history of the Medicare Program, and it is now, and we are participating in what will happen to the future of this program.

Will it be repealed, as we watched the House virtually repeal the bill earlier this week, although we in this body, mindful of our responsibilities to seniors as well as to the budget process try to pick out a package of benefits in which we search for what is best in this program and then make in fact a constructive effort to go ahead with that?

I really want to remind people what this program is all about and why the Congress passed it, why President Reagan created it with such enthusiasm and less than 2 years ago. The catastrophic program provides coverage for unlimited hospitalization, unlimited physician services after a catastrophic deductible, important long-term care benefits, including skilled nursing home care and home health and home respite care, all important coverages, new coverages for outpatient prescription drugs, the first preventive care benefit ever and that is mammography screening for breast cancer.

These benefits were enacted because millions of citizens could not afford to buy private insurance. That is the fact of life in our country. That is what the Pepper Commission, which I have the honor to chair, is all about, trying to help people with serious fundamental and life-threatening gaps in their health insurance coverage.

Millions have purchased on top of that inadequate policies, often multiple policies, not really being sure what they have purchased, which do not meet basic minimum Federal standards.

Yes, there are some retirees fortunate enough to purchase the kind of health insurance they want and it covers all kinds of things; and I am happy for them. For these few the catastrophic bill also provided protections against double coverage so that nobody would be forced to buy duplicative insurance. In fact, most of the public debate that has taken place over this bill has been on the financing and has not been on the benefits, the benefits to the beneficiaries of our country.

Yes, we have heard from numerous aging groups and numerous labor unions recently saying do not repeal.

Is the tide turning? I suggest it is. Do not repeal these benefits. If these benefits go down, if you repeal, if you just strip this thing absolutely clean, we understand that the seniors of our country are going to be exposed out in the cold, and that was the whole point of what we are trying to do less than 2 years ago to give them protection.

In addition to the harm repeal would do to the seniors, including those who are already hospitalized and dependent on the new coverage, people who are in effect receiving the benefits of the catastrophic bill that we have already passed, it would establish in this Senator's judgment a horrible precedent.

In this area of uninsured and underinsured we should not be wholesale repealing catastrophic. Let us take another look at the financing. The supplemental premium which was intended to be fair, progressive in its nature, and indeed it is, which is the way things have been done in this country, is perceived by many as too burdensome. The maximum premium amount and amounts well below the maximum amount which is $800 has been criticized. So in good faith we have gone back to the drawing board.

The Finance Committee has labored for weeks. I do not know how many hours we have spent in there looking at various options, trying to adjust catastrophic financing in a way which would relieve the burden and yet protect benefits, so that there is this initial concern about eliminating the entire catastrophic package because of a misunderstanding, because we did not communicate well enough about the $800 supplemental premium that come next April, when people discover that only 5.5 percent of Americans would be paying that premium if the current catastrophic bill passed they would then understand that we really have lost major protection.

So on behalf of the committee I can say that this task has not been easy and it has not been taken lightly. Now we face the range of options for modifying the catastrophic program in a manner that will be acceptable. And we will have amendments before us today; many of them will have merit with people in good faith trying to preserve benefits. I commend all of my colleagues who offer these amendments that try to preserve benefits for seniors who need these benefits as my colleagues will be offering these amendments in order to preserve benefits. And, yes, they will be adjusting financing but they will also be preserving various ranges of benefits and that is so important for coverage for senior citizens.

So, we must strengthen the Medicare Program. We must take the steps necessary to meet the elderly's unmet needs, gigantic gaps in health coverage in this country. So I hope as the day progresses my colleagues will seriously consider these various amendments and look particularly at benefits that are being protected.

Mr. President, I yield the floor while reserving the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, our dear friend from West Virginia reminds me of the Boy Scout who sees a little old lady standing on the corner who happened to be going the other way but he decided he is taking her on across the street whether she wants to go or not. I think in the case of this bill she has decided that she does not want to go.

Mr. President, in the catastrophic coverage bill, the free-spending policies of the 1960's and 1970's ran head on into the fiscal realities of the 1980's. Under a mandated system of deficit control measures the Finance Committee attempted to write a catastrophic coverage bill that paid for itself and, as a result, for the first time in American history we provided an entitlement that people paid for directly, and the net result is that they hate it. I think we have proven that under any semblance of fiscal restraint we have reached the limits of collectivism in America and we are here today to go back and try to set things right.

I am here speaking in favor of a budget waiver. I wanted to speak on this subject with my dear friend, Senator DOMENICI from New Mexico, because some people might think it unusual that I am here, as the Gramm of Gramm-Rudman, normally busy doing the Lord's work in the Devil's City, trying to balance the budget by voting to waive the Budget Act.

Well, Mr. President, we put into the budget law waivers to deal exactly with the kind of circumstance we have here. The budget waiver is being used as a vehicle to prevent debates on legitimate business of the U.S. Senate.

By voting to waive the Budget Act, it is true that in fiscal year 1990 the deficit goes up by $3.6 billion, and that is a lot of money. But it is also true by this waiver, if, for example, we should adopt the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Arizona, that the deficit goes down by $600 million in 1991, $3.8 billion in 1992, $4.4 billion in 1993, and $4.8 billion in 1994.

So with this budget waiver, the adoption, for example, of the proposal of the distinguished Senator from Arizona, we are saving $10 billion under current estimates over the next 5 years.

Mr. President, I remind my colleagues, we have never had a medical entitlement that did not turn out to be three or four times as expensive as we initially estimated. So in voting to waive the budget here to get around a technicality that is preventing us from righting a terrible wrong in catastrophic coverage, under current estimates we are saving almost $10 billion. My guess is that we are preventing the American taxpayer from falling into a huge fiscal hole that will cost $20 or $30 billion of which to try to dig out.

So I want to urge my colleagues to right this wrong, to make this budget waiver to allow us to reduce, bring under control, and make rational a terrible mistake that the Congress made in adopting the catastrophic coverage bill.

So I urge my colleagues, no matter what option they prefer, whether they prefer to repeal catastrophic outright, whether they prefer adopting a modification which preserves the surtax of this bill, or whether they intend to adopt the proposal of the distinguished Senator from Arizona, all of those actions require a waiver.

But the waiver itself, over the next 5 years, gives us the possibility of saving $10 billion. I can assure you in strengthening these waivers and raising them to 60 votes, it was not my intent that they be used as a vehicle to stop us from saving money. It was my intent that they be used as a vehicle to save money; $10 billion, even in the Federal city, is a lot of money.

Undoing the wrong and unfairness of the catastrophic coverage bill goes far beyond money. It goes to the very heart of what is right and wrong. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I yield the senior Senator from Massachusetts 7 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] is recognized for 7 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, later in this debate, I intend to offer an amendment to preserve the key drug benefits for the elderly in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

When Medicare was passed in 1965, it was the most important step forward for our Nation's senior citizens since the enactment of Social Security more than a half century ago. It is difficult to remember today that in the dark days before Medicare, every illness was catastrophic for senior citizens—because a single hospitalization could wipe out the savings of a lifetime.

Medicare was a health care bill of rights for every elderly American. But it was a bill of rights with fundamental gaps that were apparent from the day Medicare was enacted. Medicare did not cover very long hospital stays; it placed no limit on the potential liability for copayments for hospital bills; it did not cover outpatient prescription drugs; and it did not cover home care or nursing home care except on a restricted and temporary basis.

In the years subsequent to Medicare's enactment, a strong private insurance market has grown up around the solid base that Medicare provides. Eighty percent of senior citizens have either Medicaid or private Medigap coverage. When that private coverage is not provided through an employer group plan, it is often grossly overpriced. Indeed when a senior citizen buys an individual Medigap policy, he will often pay an insurance company markup that is equal to 40 percent of benefit costs—compared to Medicare's administrative costs of just 2 or 3 percent. But despite the fact that senior citizens have to pay too much for the Medigap coverage they buy, the coverage does fill some of Medicare's most glaring holes.

Virtually all private policies cover hospital deductibles, copayments, and extended stays. Coverage of copayments for physician care is almost always covered and is also often overpriced. But it does provide essential protection against hospital and doctor's bills.

The two great health insurance needs that neither private insurance nor Medicare covers are long-term care and prescription drugs. Last year's catastrophic legislation covered the latter but not the former, and it is important to understand why that decision was made, since it is an important issue in the present debate.

For three-quarters of the elderly population, prescription drugs represent the largest out-of-pocket health care expense they face. The inability to pay for prescription drugs is particularly tragic because these drugs often represent the difference between disability and death and a reasonably healthy old age. For those who can manage to pay for prescription drugs to treat long-term, chronic illness, the cost of the drugs often represents the difference between a comfortable life and perpetual poverty. No senior citizen should have to face the choice between living in pain or living in poverty.

Reasonable protection for prescription drugs is an affordable expansion of Medicare in our present budget situation. The protection will cost $3 billion a year when fully implemented, and we are serving the elderly badly if we repeal it.

Long-term care is the other vast need of the elderly, but it is also vastly expensive. The potential financial devastation that long-term care can bring, whether it is provided in a nursing home or a senior citizen's own home, is more feared by senior citizens and their families than virtually any other threat to their security.

The elderly need insurance protection against the high cost of long-term care today just as much as we needed Medicare a generation ago. But long-term care insurance under Medicare would be vastly expensive—costing tens of billions of dollars a year if reasonable protection is to be provided. It will require significant new broad-based revenues to finance it. Even if we were to enact a program of long-term care insurance tomorrow, the elderly would still need protection from the high cost of prescription drugs today.

The amendment I am proposing repeals the surtax that so many of the wealthy elderly find objectionable and that has caused the present controversy. To mix the metaphor, we should not let this firestorm throw out the baby with the bath water. It would be irresponsible for Congress to repeal the entire catastrophic program because of the surtax. There are essential benefit expansions that can and must be preserved, and that can be financed fairly.

My amendment keeps the most important coverage that the catastrophic bill provided—the provisions for prescription drugs. It delays the implementation of the benefit for 1 additional year, so that the program will begin in 1992. This benefit affects a larger proportion of the elderly than any other element of catastrophic coverage. It is also the only major benefit that is unavailable on the private insurance market.

The amendment also retains the expanded part A coverage of hospital services. The failure of Medicare to cover the hospital costs associated with long stays and repeated admissions is a serious problem. No decent private policy for the nonaged population fails to provide this coverage.

Finally, the amendment retains some of the important but less costly coverage provided by the catastrophic bill—hospice care, home health care, respite care, and mammography screening.

The amendment pays for these benefits in two ways. First, it retains the modest increase in the flat rate premium that has been accepted by the elderly and is not controversial. Second, it extends the tying of the premium to 25 percent of program costs, beginning in 1992. As program costs go up, the premium will go up too.

I hope that every Senator who is tempted to vote to repeal all of what we enacted last year will have a second thought. This is the role the Senate is intended to play under the Constitution. We are supposed to be able to stand up to ill political winds better than the House.

A recent poll of the elderly showed that 70 percent do not want the catastrophic program repealed. And there is no justification for repealing it. It is broke, so we have to fix it. We do not have to destroy it in order to save it. For the sake of millions of low- and middle-income Americans who desperately need assistance in meeting the high cost of prescription drugs, let us act responsibly and do the right thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield some time?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I again rise in support of the bill offered by the distinguished Senator from Arizona to change many of the provisions of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. I believe that we in Congress must respond now to the firestorm of discontent among our seniors. And, we must put forth an alternative that will include some part of the current catastrophic law.

It has been almost 2 months since we offered a bill to delay implementation of provisions in the catastrophic act that have not already been implemented. The problem remains that seniors want a change in this law and they want it now. We are all still receiving letters and phone calls from angry seniors. These seniors, from all around this country, are opposed to the act for three reasons. First, they do not like the cost and the financing of the plan. Second, they do not like the particular benefits that Congress has dictated that the plan include. And, third, and perhaps most important, they do not like the Federal Government mandating participation in this new program.

Today, we will begin a deliberate and meaningful debate on the 1988 catastrophic law. The debate will revolve around three issues:

First, should we maintain any part of the catastrophic program or merely support an outright repeal;

Second, should we retain the basic program including the supplemental premium and just reduce some benefits because of cost; or

Third, should we keep the flat $4 premium and provide seniors with the benefits that $4 will cover.

Mr. President, I support the third option, which is embodied in the McCain bill, because it retains those benefits which can be paid for by the small flat premium. For a small flat premium, seniors will continue to receive their core catastrophic benefits: the long-term hospitalization protection; the spousal impoverishment protection; the Medicaid buy-in; and the pregnant mothers and infants program. This bill reverts back to prior law the skilled-nursing facility benefit, but makes the following modifications: it will provide those receiving a skilled nursing facility benefit prior to November 1, with coverage under the existing law. This bill will also retain the home health care benefit, the blood deductible, the respite care, the mammography screening, some limited drug benefits, and the hospice benefit. It will retain these benefits at a flat premium cost of under $5 in the first year. Finally, this bill will permit a lowering of the flat premium if the costs of the benefits do not require the full revenues provided by the flat premiums.

I believe this is a workable proposal that we in the Senate should support. Over the past few months, a great number of experts have been revisiting the act to try and find answers to the concerns raised by our Nation's seniors. The Joint Center on Taxation, the Congressional Budget Office, and even Secretary Sullivan have been reexamining the projected revenues and expenses associated with the act in an effort to respond to concerns about financing. During the recent Finance Committee hearing, the Congressional Budget Office released new projections which suggest that the previous estimates of an $8 to $10 billion surplus over 4 years have now been reduced to a $5 billion surplus. So, in just a few months, the CBO estimates of what the existing program will cost have increased by $3 billion. Mr. President, that is not just a rounding error. Clearly, a high degree of uncertainty continues to surround this act. And, I am fearful that if we do not put the brakes on those parts that have not been implemented, and refine the existing benefits, we will find ourselves with even more difficulties.

Mr. President, I only wish that this benefit would be optional for all seniors in America. But when I talk abut voluntary participation, I do not mean merely attaching it to voluntary participation under part B.

This proposal is a way to dupe our seniors into believing that this will make the catastrophic program voluntary. It will be voluntary only if you close your eyes and ignore the big stick above your head. They say seniors may opt out of catastrophic, but they will also lose their part B benefits. Let us face it: in reality this claim is simply a false political promise to our Nation's senior citizens. Part B benefits are subsidized at 75 percent of the cost. Part B benefits provide seniors with services they need like physician visits and outpatient services. The so-called voluntary approach is misleading, and I, for one, am not willing to lead seniors on by telling them this really gives them a true option. Our colleague from Wyoming has a proposal which makes the catastrophic program truly voluntary. This is what we should be doing—not merely making another illusory promise to placate our senior constitutents.

Also, we should make these changes proposed by Senator MCCAIN because we are overly taxing our seniors in America. There are concerns that we will have a $4.7 billion shortfall by enacting this bill, but let us be honest. If we do not change our law, we are taxing the senior citizens of America to finance the deficit. It makes our balance sheet look better so we will not have to make tough choices in other areas of Federal spending. We will not have to tighten the belts on other spending programs. Mr. President, I will not balance the budget on the backs of seniors, and I urge my colleagues to join me.

I believe the McCain bill is sound health policy and is a package of catastrophic benefits that seniors will be willing and able to purchase at an affordable cost. The protest against the current Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act by our Nation's seniors has been long and loud. We in Congress can take a positive step to demonstrate our willingness and ability to respond to these constituents through passage of this bill. I urge all of my colleagues to vote for the McCain bill.

Mr. President, I would also like to make a statement in favor of waiving the budget point of order.

I rise in support of Senator DOMENICI's proposal to waive the budgetary point of order. I entirely agree with his assertion that we must look at two things in making the decision about waiving the budget:

First, its long-term impact on the budget;

Second, who it will affect.

First, it has a long-term impact of increasing the Federal debt $6 billion over the next 5 years. Yes, if we just look at the first year, fiscal year 1990, we have a $2 billion net deficit. But in 1991, there is a $0.6 billion ($600 million) revenue loss; in fiscal year 1992 a $3.5 billion revenue loss; and in fiscal year 1993 a $3.9 billion revenue loss, adding up to a $6 billion net deficit over 5 years. So the long-term budget impact is costly to the budget.

Second, the current catastrophic proposal is opposed by seniors in America. They do not want this plan and we should not force it upon them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON] and inquire how many minutes I have remaining.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 5 minutes and 54 seconds of which he will yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON].

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, we are now debating whether or not to grant a budget waiver, which will allow us to debate either the repeal or the amendment of the Catastrophic Health Care Act.

I find it most impressive that the single individual, the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] responsible for the Gramm-Rudman Act which requires a budget waiver to get 60 votes, has spoken so forcefully in favor of this waiver, together with Mr. DOMENICI, who perhaps has been more responsible than any other individual in seeing to the implementation of the Gramm-Rudman law.

They have spoken in favor of this waiver because, of course, while technically this bill will add to the deficit in fiscal year 1990, it will in fact save some $10 billion over the course of the next 10 years if we grant the waiver and pass the proposal suggested by my friend, the Senator from Arizona. As a result, I am convinced that the budget waiver will carry and will carry handsomely and substantially.

The substantive issue before us is whether or not we will continue to follow the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Arizona, due to whose efforts we are here today.

There are some, now that we are finally debating this bill, who feel that it can be repaired with just little cosmetic changes of one kind or another. I believe, Mr. President, they are wrong. There are those who think the only way to save this patient is with an ax, killing the patient entirely and starting all over again. I believe, Mr. President, they are wrong.

The distinguished Senator from Arizona has proposed surgery which will rid this bill of the single element, the surtax, which is most objectionable to most people at the cost of the least popular or least desired of all of the benefits arising out of the bill. At the same time, he does propose to save what is actually the title of the bill, catastrophic health care.

I hope and I trust this body will grant this waiver, will look carefully at each of the amendments with which we will deal today, and will finish by approving the bill introduced by the Senator from Arizona after so much time, so much patience, and so much sensitivity toward senior groups who have supported him and led us to this point today.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Will my colleague yield to me on the time of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. GORTON. I am not capable of yielding to the Senator on the time of the Senator from West Virginia. Perhaps he will.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The Senator from West Virginia will be glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota. How many minutes?

Mr. DURENBERGER. I need 2 minutes to ask a question of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. If my colleague would, I am pleased to have him proceed on my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How much time does the Senator from West Virginia yield? How much time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. For 2 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may proceed for 2 minutes.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, this is the second time now we have heard the figure $10 billion in deficit savings used. I am curious to know where this comes from, since the current authorizing legislation fully funds the current program. We have been hearing this figure $10 billion that we are saving by voting for this waiver. I am curious; does the Senator know where that comes from?

Mr. GORTON. I say to my friend, the Senator from Minnesota, that the figures I have in front of me are from the Congressional Budget Office. They list, from 1990 through 1994, the amounts of revenues to the Federal Treasury which will be lost by repealing the surtax. They begin with the figure $7 billion in 1990 and end with a figure of $8.5 billion in 1994, for a total of $37.1 billion.

The repeal benefits in the McCain bill begin with only $3.4 billion in 1990 and end up at $12.3 billion in 1994 for a total of $45.2 billion. The difference is $9.9 billion. I beg the indulgence of the Senator from Minnesota, having rounded that in my speech to $10 billion.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I thank my colleague from Washington.

Will the Senator from West Virginia yield an additional 5 minutes to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am grateful to our colleague from West Virginia, and also our colleague from Washington who explained the figure that is being used for a rationale, both for waiving the budget and a rationale, apparently, for support of the McCain legislation.

I would like my colleagues to understand that the $10 billion deficit problem is not created by the Medicare Catastrophic Act. The $10 billion deficit problem is created by those who would repeal the catastrophic bill. Whether it is the McCain repeal or the Roth-Danforth repeal or someone else's repeal, it is the efforts on this floor to repeal or substantially amend the Medicare catastrophic bill that is creating the problem of the deficit, because the current catastrophic bill is fully funded.

Yes, the costs may be going up more rapidly in some areas than people expected. Yes, it may be that politicians, like the Senator from Texas and others, who always had their doubts about our ability to contain these costs within the benefiting generation, will say that it might fall apart and fall on the taxpayer.

But the reality is, not one nickel has fallen on any general tax, on any payroll tax or on anybody else. The problem of the deficit impact is the problem created by Members on the floor of the Senate, by people with proposals like those of the Senator from Arizona and the others who propose to repeal the surtax, in particular, or some parts of the flat premium. They are creating the problem of the deficit.

So you can support waiver as proposed by my colleague from Arizona and my colleague from New Mexico, and I may well supprt the waiver as well. But it is only for purposes of making sure that whatever amendment that is on the consent list to be acted on can be acted on without requiring 60 votes. It has nothing to do with curing a deficit created by the Medicare catastrophic bill because that bill does not create any deficit whatsoever.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DURENBERGER. I yield back whatever time I have.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. GRAHAM. I was asking if the Senator from Minnesota would yield for a question.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Senator stated that the deficit problem is created by people like the Senator from Arizona who are advocating reform in this legislation; is that correct?

Mr. DURENBERGER. I do not want to say it is created by the Senator but it will be created by the effect of the adoption of this amendment; that is correct.

Mr. GRAHAM. Would it not be more correct to say the deficit problem is created by a more fundamental problem, and that is the fact that we have improperly mixed the general revenue deficit of the Federal Government with the surpluses of various trust funds, including Social Security, in order to create an artificially lower deficit than, in fact, exists?

Mr. DURENBERGER. No, the deficit is a deficit, and I cannot acknowledge that. There is no deficit under the current legislation.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Senator does not see there is a fundamental element of fraud in having this program which was intended to provide additional health services for the elderly which was provided with a reserve in the early years in order to prepare for long-term financing of those services, and then using that reserve as a means of artificially lowering Federal general revenue deficit?

Mr. DURENBERGER. My colleague is bringing up another issue. The issue of the Federal deficit reduction caused by a surplus, either in the Social Security, OASDI trust fund which is running a current surplus in the neighborhood of $60, $70, or $80 billion a year, or in the trust fund created for catastrophic, is a very different issue from the one I raised on the floor here today. It has nothing to do with the $10 billion that is being bandied around here.

Mr. GRAHAM. I beg to differ with the Senator from Minnesota, and I ask if he does not believe that by focusing on this skin rash of the effect of adopting the proposal of the Senator from Arizona or any other proposal and saying that is the problem and ignoring the tumor that lies beneath that rash, which is the fact we have improvidently mixed trust funds with general revenue for the specific purpose of understating the extent of our national deficit, that that is the real fundamental problem and that we should not allow that to keep us from making intelligent public policy in terms of health of senior Americans?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time yielded to the Senator from Minnesota has expired. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I have to note, not without understanding, but with some regret that all the conversation virtually that has gone back and forth has been related simply to the matter of budget and simply to the matter of how much are we going to be causing ourselves to getting close to triggering Gramm-Rudman and the rest of it.

I have not heard a lot of discussions about benefits. I continue to think that it is quite clear that the original catastrophic bill is going to be amended. The cost of it is going to go down sharply; that the benefits accruing to it will go down sharply because of the reduction in the costs. But the benefits are part of what we are here for.

The seniors in West Virginia are interested in benefits and, yes, they are concerned about costs and we are going to accommodate one way or another today their concerns about costs. We will do it fairly; we will do it wisely, presumably.

But people ought to remember that there are already in skilled nursing facilities people who are at the point of death and who are being fed intravenously, kept alive by various machinery. And then if we repeal all of this and there is none left, we are going to be seeing them wheeled out desperately sick. The television cameras, I hope, and the networks would be sure to cover that because that is part of the lesson of what we are about today—if we repeal benefits and that is what we are here to do—trying to help people.

If we repeal all of these benefits we are, and I think the Senator from Arizona would agree with this, looking at a backlash of incredible proportions. Benefits are part of our conversation. They ought to be more of our conversation, not just simply the matter of the budget.

I reserve the remainder of my time. Mr. President, I yield the floor in so doing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator controls 2 minutes, 50 seconds under the waiver. The Senator from West Virginia controls 6 minutes and 50 seconds.

Mr. McCAIN. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I will be delighted to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I speak today as an original cosponsor of Senator McCAIN's bill to reform the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988—and a strong supporter of his efforts to respond to the concerns of senior citizens on this issue.

I want to commend Senator McCAIN, and his staff, for the work they have done. I have done so many times before when we were fighting to get his delay bill, S. 335, passed. I thought that we should address the criticism of the Catastrophic Act head on. I made a comparison to section 89, and called on my colleagues not to take the seniors of this country on the same roller coaster ride that we took the small business owners on. The 1-year delay provided for in S. 335 would have given Congress time to reach a consensus on this controversial law in the most rational way.

Unfortunately, we are reaching the end of the year, and the seniors' concerns have not yet been addressed. The deadlock on this issue forced Senator McCAIN to raise it again on the Defense appropriations bill, thus bringing us to where we are today.

It also forced him to come up with a reform package. It has not been an easy road, but he has stuck to his guns and come up with the most workable solution.

I support this bill over the other options—including total repeal—for a number of reasons.

No. 1. It addresses the concerns of a majority of seniors. I have heard from thousands of senior citizens in my State just like every other Member of this body. And the No. 1 message carried to me through those letters was "get rid of the surtax." We are doing just that.

No. 2. It is solid health care policy. The McCain proposal retains the benefits that have already been implemented, retains the most meritorious benefits, repeals the benefits for which seniors have little need, and retains the principle that seniors should help pay for the costs of these benefits.

I think that it makes good sense to retain the benefits that have already gone into effect, and not to rip the rug out from under those who are already receiving these benefits. It also just so happens that those benefits are some of the best benefits in the bill.

The spousal impoverishment protection and expanded Medicaid buy-in provisions for poverty level Medicare beneficiaries and pregnant women and infants have been supported by everyone—even those who support total repeal. In fact, the spousal impoverishment provision has been hailed as a much needed long-term care reform.

In recent polls, seniors also rated as "highly important" the expanded hospitalization benefit and the mammography screening benefit which are retained in the McCain bill.

The home health, hospice, respite, and home IV therapy benefits address—to a certain extent—the need for expanded home health care coverage. These benefits either provide directly for home health care or provide services which help relatives and loved ones care for chronically or terminally ill people at home. In the case of home IV therapy, the American Society of Hospital Pharmacists states that:

> These programs have enabled patients to complete their drug treatment in their homes safely and effectively while decreasing real health care costs.

Now, that is the kind of program that deserves our support.

The benefits that are repealed are the prescription drug benefit and the part B out-of-pocket cap—the two benefits that few seniors support. Two separate polls—one done by the Wirthlin Group for the Coalition for Affordable Health Care and one done by Cooper & Secrest Associates for the National Committee To Preserve Social Security and Medicare—found that these two benefits were regarded by seniors as the least valuable benefits included in catastrophic.

The final change that I want to mention pertains to the skilled nursing facilities benefit. The McCain proposal retains this benefit, but scales it back to the way it was before the Catastrophic Act. This benefit is rated as "highly important" by seniors, but the expanded coverage under catastrophic was exceeding original cost estimates by 543 percent. The McCain proposal recognizes the importance of this benefit, while at the same time recognizing that we must be fiscally responsible, which leads me to my final point.

No. 3. This proposal is fiscally responsible and even conservative. It is financed by maintaining the part B premium increase as passed in the Catastrophic Act. Seniors in both of the polls I mentioned above indicated a willingness to help pay for additional benefits, if they were benefits they wanted. I think that this reform bill responds to that message.

The financing proposal is conservative in my opinion because it allows for a cushion each year—accumulating to a $4.5 billion cushion over the next 5 years. We have seen time and time again how Medicare benefit costs tend to get out of hand. We saw it most recently in the skilled nursing facilities benefit. This proposal recognizes that fact, and makes allowances for it.

There is also a provision in the bill that allows the Secretary of HHS to scale back the premium if the costs do stay in line. Therefore, we are not just collecting extra revenue to hide the deficit. We are doing it to make sure we can pay for the benefits that we are promising the senior citizens of this Nation.

I know that many will argue that we should scrap catastrophic in order to start with a clean slate and to avoid piecemeal health care policy. They will say that we need overall Medicare reform. Well, I agree with them about the need for reform, but I do not think that scrapping catastrophic is the answer.

I do hope that Congress will look at Medicare reform in the near future. This program consumed 7.5 percent of the Federal budget in 1988, and is expected to consume 10.6 percent in 1993. There is no doubt that the current Medicare system does not distribute this amount of money very efficiently.

I support looking for ways to reform Medicare. I especially support looking for ways that it could help seniors with their No. 1 concern which is long-term care. I hope that Congress will undertake this task soon, but I hope no one thinks we are undertaking that task now.

Mr. President, I want to restate my support for the McCain proposal, and urge my colleagues to do the same.

In summary, Mr. President, I rise today in support of the McCain amendment, but I think what we are talking about here is the action of waiving the budget. After listening to this and seeing many graphs and bars that tell us the direction that we should be going, it would be interesting to see how many of those graphs and bars hold true 3 and 4 and 5 years later.

I think we are concerned that this started the terrible fire storm out there and we, as mortal politicians, reacted to that.

I compliment Senator MCCAIN of Arizona for taking a piece of legislation already a law, that is already on the books and reworking it to where it is acceptable both to our elder community and to our budget process. Of course, that remains to be played out. I say, again, very seldom do we see those figures be the same 2 and 3 years later.

This does address the needs of our senior citizens. I think when I first came here in January, I did not think anybody else could write letters other than our senior citizens. That is all I received by the buckets full. So we knew we had to come up with some sort of a plan to revamp this thing called catastrophic health.

It does what I think the senior citizens want, and that is what I am being told every time I go back to Montana. So I support the McCain approach. I think repeal does nothing for us. In fact, if we start all over again, we may be in worse shape than we already are. I think they want the spousal impoverishment; I think they want skilled nursing care. And one day we are going to have to look at long-term care. That will be addressed at a later date.

So I congratulate the managers of this particular legislation and look forward to its passage. I urge my colleagues to support it and also support waiving the budget. Mr. President, I want to thank you and I yield my time.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I support waiving the Budget Act point of order against the McCain legislation on the Castastrophic Health Care Program. The Senate should move past this obstacle and debate the merits of the bill.

I support this waiver despite my strong concern that we not take any action to aggravate our deficit. The budget point of order lies against the bill because the Catastrophic Health Care Program actually generates extra revenues during its first year of implementation. Thus, catastrophic actually eases our deficit for fiscal year 1990. Therefore, repealing or modifying the laws called for in the McCain legislation and the pending amendments will worsen our deficit during the first year.

However, focusing only on the first year of implementation is artificially narrow, Mr., President. Whether you favor or oppose continuation of the Catastrophic Health Care Program, all must admit that will cost the Government billions more than it will generate over the long term. While sustaining the budget point of order would therefore ease our deficit problems for 1 year, it would perversely aggravate our deficit in all succeeding years.

The long-term impact of legislation on the deficit should be our concern. I therefore support waiving the budget act point of order. The issues surrounding this legislation are vexing. The bill's budget impact, however, should not be an obstacle to addressing these issues.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I will not be able to support the amendment of my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY].

As I understand the proposal, it would retain the prescription drug benefit and the hospital catastrophic protections as well as a number of smaller benefits. In fact, I have but a couple of observations on the prescription drug benefit, Mr. President. In the first place, they are expensive. Furthermore, the original estimates by the Congressional Budget Office grossly underestimated the cost of the prescription drug benefit. I must confess to harbouring a lingering doubt about the current estimates we have from CBO. How much will we find these benefits to cost when we get CBO's next estimate, or when the true costs begin to come in?

In the second place, at least with respect to the prescription drug benefit, I do not believe that this benefit is one of those most desired by Medicare beneficiaries, at least insofar as the polls taken on the Catastrophic Program represent what our constituents are thinking. The polls show that the prescription drug benefit is not one of those seen by Medicare beneficiaries as one of the more valuable benefits in the bill.

I would just also observe that, in the mail I am getting on this subject, my constituents do not appear to be demanding preservation of this benefit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I yield myself whatever time is remaining.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona is recognized for 2 minutes 29 seconds.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, first, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of my friend from West Virginia concerning the benefits for seniors and the result of what we do today.

I hope a lot more of our debate will center around what benefits seniors need and want and deserve. So I appreciate his refocusing this debate on that very critical part of the issue. But since my friend from Minnesota raised several points about the budget I would like to point out that in the same letter which was recently included as part of the RECORD from Mr. Darman, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, he described several things that happened in the budget process. He says:

> And if the emerging reconciliation bill, including the language dealing with the scoring of medicare payment shifts, is enacted our current estimate of the G-R-H baseline deficit would be reduced by approximately $12 billion. This would then yield a revised G-R-H deficit estimate that could accommodate your amendment without triggering sequester.

So the administration is now saying, as they have not in the past, that if my legislation is passed it will not trigger sequester.

Let me remind my friend from Minnesota of what we are talking about here as far as $10 billion and other billions of dollars. First of all, the cost of this legislation as passed has already gone from an initial estimate of $31 billion to $45 billion and it continues up. We know where that money, due to the nature of this legislation, has to be paid, out of the surtax, which means that the surtax would continue to skyrocket.

Perhaps my friend from Minnesota does not agree that by repealing certain benefits, then certain taxes will not be raised, but that is the case. Between 1990 and 1994, because of the repealed surtax, there would be a $37 billion loss in revenue to the Treasury. Because of the reduced outlays, because of repealed benefits, there would be a $46 billion increase in moneys that will not be spent, thereby leaving $9.9 billion which is the basis of the comments of Senator GRAMM and the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Arizona has expired.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Margaret Van Amringe, who is on detail to Senator MITCHELL's office from the Department of Health and Human Services, be permitted privileges of the Senate floor during consideration of the pending catastrophic insurance reform measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I wish to use the remainder of the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am going to vote for this Budget Waiver Act. I am going to do it reluctantly, and I am going to do it because we simply are where we are. We have no choice. The only responsible thing to do, it seems to me, if we want to protect benefits and help seniors who desperately need help, is to waive the Budget Act in order to allow these various amendments to come before us which very in their approach to both benefits and cost.

I say, as strongly as I can summon myself, catastrophic health care and the several billions of dollars that are associated with it is just a tiny part of what it is that this body, this Congress, this Nation, and its people are going to have to face up to and make choices about in the very near future.

Let us say catastrophic ends up at $2 or $3 billion or $4 billion, depending upon what we pass. I suggest that we have 37 million uninsured Americans in this country. They have no insurance whatsoever. Twenty-five percent of them are children. That is going to be tens of billions of dollars. We cannot be a civilized nation and have people without health insurance. I suggest that there are millions of seniors and nonelderly who do not have long-term care coverage. When I am talking about nonelderly, I am saying that because when we talk about long-term care we tend to think of seniors, and indeed they are a major part of that, but we have hundreds of thousands of youngsters, of teenagers, people in their thirties and forties who have various crippling disabilities or diseases who need long-term care. It is an issue for all America. I know of no proposal that would cost less than $40 or $60 billion in addressing that program. So you have $40 billion to $60 billion for long-term care which we have to face up to on a moral basis, a human basis, and in responsibility to this Nation. We have the uninsured. You are talking about tens of billions of dollars and we are going through absolutely an orgy of destruction and agony on a relatively minor cost in a very important bill called catastrophic health care.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to vote for this budget waiver because it is where we are and because it is what we have to do in order to protect benefits for seniors who need those benefits.

I yield the remainder of my time, Mr. President, and I am prepared to go to a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion to waive the Budget Act. The yeas and nays are ordered. The clerk will please repeat the responses as they are made. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

(B) in subsection (k)—

(i) in paragraph (1)(A), by inserting "except as provided in subsection (m)," before "subsection (g)(2)(A)", and

(ii) in paragraph (3), by striking "subsection (l)" and inserting "subsections (l), (m), and (n)"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(m)(1)(A) If, within the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subsection, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as the 'Association') amends the amended NAIC Model Regulation (referred to in subsection (k)(1)(A) and adopted on September 20, 1988) to reflect the changes in law made by the Medicare Catastrophic Revision Act of 1989, subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in a State, effective on and after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, were a reference to the amended NAIC Model Regulation (referred to in subsection (k)(1)(A)) as amended by the Association in accordance with this paragraph (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as the 'revised NAIC Model Regulation').

"(B) The date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the earlier of the date the State adopts standards equal to or more stringent than the revised NAIC Model Regulation or 1 year after the date the Association first adopts such revised Regulation.

"(2)(A) If the Association does not amend the amended NAIC Model Regulations, within the 90-day period specified in paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary shall promulgate, not later than 60 days after the end of such period, revised Federal model standards (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as 'revised Federal model standards') for medical supplemental policies to reflect the changes in law made by the Medicare Catastrophic Revision Act of 1989, subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in a State, effective on and after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, were a reference to the revised Federal model standards.

"(B) The date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the earlier of the date the State adopts standards equal to or more stringent than the revised Federal model standards or 1 year after the date the Secretary first promulgated such standards.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section (except as provided in subsection (n))—

"(A) no medicare supplemental policy may be certified by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (a),

"(B) no certification made pursuant to subsection (a) shall remain in effect, and

"(C) no State regulatory program shall be found to meet (or to continue to meet) the requirements of subsection (b)(1)(A), unless such policy meets (or such program provides for the application of standards equal to or more stringent than) the standards set forth in the revised NAIC Model Regulation or the revised Federal model standards (as the case may be) by the date specified in paragraph (1)(B) or (2)(B) (as the case may be).

"(n)(1) Until the date specified in paragraph (4), in the case of a qualifying medicare supplemental policy described in paragraph (3) issued in a State—

"(A) before July 1, 1990, the policy is deemed to remain in compliance with the standards described in subsection (b)(1)(A) if the insurer issuing the policy complies with the transition provision described in paragraph (2), or

"(B) on or after July 1, 1990, the policy is deemed to be in compliance with the standards described in subsection (b)(1)(A) if the insurer issuing the policy complies with the revised NAIC Model Regulation or the revised Federal model standards (as the case may be) before the date of the sale of the policy.

"(2) The transition provision described in this paragraph is—

"(A) such transition provision as the Association provides, by not later than December 15, 1989, so as to provide for an appropriate transition to reflect the changes in benefits under this title made by the Medicare Catastrophic Revision Act of 1989, or

"(B) if the Association does not provide for a transition provision by the date described in subparagraph (A), such transition provision as the Secretary shall provide, by January 1, 1990, so as to provide for an appropriate transition described in subparagraph (A).

"(3) In paragraph (1), the term 'qualifying medicare supplemental policy' means a medicare supplemental policy which has been issued in compliance with this section as in effect on the date before the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(4)(A) The date specified in this paragraph for a policy issued in a State is—

"(i) the first date a State adopts, after the date of the enactment of this subsection, standards equal to or more stringent than the revised NAIC Model Regulation (or revised Federal model standards), as the case may be, or

"(ii) the date specified in subparagraph (B), whichever is earlier.

"(B) In the case of a State which the Secretary identifies, in consultation with the Association, as—

"(i) requiring State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for medicare supplemental policies to meet standards described in subparagraph (A)(i), but

"(ii) having a legislature which is not scheduled to meet in 1990 in a legislative session in which such legislation may be considered, the date specified in this subparagraph is the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first legislative session of the State legislature that begins on or after January 1, 1990. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

"(5) In the case of a medicare supplemental policy in effect on January 1, 1990, the policy shall not be deemed to meet the standards in subsection (c) unless each individual who is entitled to benefits under this title and is a policy holder under such policy on such date is sent a notice in any appropriate form by not later than January 31, 1990, that explains—

"(A) the changes in benefits under this title effected by the Medicare Catastrophic Revision Act of 1989, and

"(B) how these changes affect the benefits contained in such policy and the premium for the policy.

"(6) In the case of an insurer which had in effect, as of December 31, 1988, a medicare supplemental policy with respect to an individual, for which the individual terminated coverage as of January 1, 1989 (or the earliest renewal date thereafter), no medicare supplemental policy of the insurer shall be deemed to meet the standards in subsection (c) unless the insurer—

"(A) provides written notice, by January 15, 1990, to the individual (at the most recent available address) of the offer described in subparagraph (B), and

"(B) offers to the individual, during the period beginning on January 1, 1990, and ending on March 1, 1990, continuation of coverage under such a medicare supplemental policy (with coverage effective as of January 1, 1990), under the terms respecting treatment of pre-existing conditions and group rating of premium which are at least as favorable to the individual as such terms as existed with respect to the policy as of December 31, 1988.".

(2) It is the sense of Congress that States should respond, at the earliest practicable date after the date of the enactment of this Act, to requests by insurers for review and approval of riders and premium adjustments for medicare supplemental policies in order to comply with the amendments made by paragraph (1).

(b) ADJUSTMENT OF CONTRACTS WITH PREPAID HEALTH PLANS.—Section 222 of MCCA is amended by inserting "and before January 1, 1990," after "December 31, 1988," each place it appears.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes on this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as I mentioned earlier the two greatest concerns of our senior citizens in our Nation today are, one, for home health care or long-term nursing care; and second, the issue of prescription drugs.

There are various coverages for individuals, for hospitalization and doctors' care, and so many of our elderly take advantage of those particular programs. But there is virtually no coverage for our seniors for prescription drugs, and when we are talking about the catastrophic nature of medical bills, it is in this area more than any other area that our seniors are affected.

There are 5.4 million people every year who have catastrophic health expenses just because of prescription drugs, 1.3 million for inpatient hospital benefits, and 2.3 million for physician benefits, so there is really an area of public policy of greatest concern.

No. 1, there are not available to our seniors the availability of purchasing insurance programs to deal with that. No. 2, they virtually do not exist.

No. 3, this amendment will provide for the prescription drugs for our seniors.

As indicated in this legislation, we have eliminated the surtax. We only maintain the continuation of the drug benefit portion that already exists in the legislation which is extremely modest which is included in the McCain proposal. And we fund this proposal with the savings, the difference between the 25-percent payments of seniors under the Medicare Program and the cost-of-living increase.

In 1972, because of the rise of health costs, the Congress wisely limited the increase in premiums for our elderly to what the consumer price index was going to be, recognizing that the seniors themselves could not control increasing health care costs and the seniors were not responsible for the deficit. Those were congressional actions. So the seniors should only have to pay the increase in the consumer price index.

In 1982, that policy was changed to include that the seniors were going to have to pay 25 percent of all the costs, and that amount is being used today for deficit reductions.

The seniors in our country on Medicare are paying a disproportionate amount for deficit reduction. All we are doing now is recapturing that which has been basically described as a temporary measure and has even been included in the reconciliation provision as a temporary measure just for this year. We are saying after the reconciliation of this year, we are going to go back to the wise policy up to 1982 for our seniors and use those savings to fund the drug package.

This program which we have I think of all the various programs that are going to be voted on today is the more expansive with that particular issue in mind, the prescription drug issue, and that is why I have been very hopeful that this would be an added feature to the McCain proposal.

Finally, I just say I welcome the strong support of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Senator HEINZ has been a real leader in the Senate for a number of years on the whole question of out-of-hospital prescription drugs and is one of the most knowledgeable individuals in the Senate on this issue. Having his support is, I think, very important and I am very appreciative.

Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I say at the outset I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for taking the leadership on his side of the aisle in bringing this before the Senate. To my mind it is an absolutely essential and vital amendment in the Senate today.

I really worry about the fact that because there are flaws, deep flaws, some would say, in some circumstances, I would agree with the legislation that we enacted last year, that we throw the baby out with the bath water.

There are many good provisions in the catastrophic coverage bill, but we are all aware that the financing was, until we changed it, deeply flawed. It caused 40 percent of the people to pay 82 percent of the cost of the progrm. That is unfair and outrageous, and we heard a lot about that outrage and unfairness.

There are benefits in the legislation we passed last year that are duplicative, and in retrospect we were not smart to include benefits that people did not feel they needed or wanted

What the Senator from Massachusetts and I propose to do is very simple. It is to address every single one of those issues that is of great unfairness; namely, we eliminate the supplemental premium, the surtax, the tax on the tax, as some people call it, and we get rid of the part B cap, so-called, and we keep the benefits that the people of this country, our senior citizens, and their children know are absolutely essential to staying out of the nursing home, to avoiding institutionalization.

I am referring to the long-term care benefit for home health, the preventiative care mammography. I am referring to hospital catastrophic. But above all, Mr. President, I am referring to the fact that the Kennedy-Heinz amendment retains coverage for prescription drugs.

It was just about a year ago that I was privileged to come before the Senate on the 27th of October and offer on behalf of myself and the majority leader of today, Senator MITCHELL then, an amendment to include prescription drug coverage under the Catastrophic Act.

By a vote of 88 to 9, the Senate put itself on record in favor of covering prescription drugs under the Catastrophic Act.

Mr. President, I think our reasons for doing so now are as valid as they were then, and the reason we did it then is the very simple fact that there are some 5 million senior citizens who today are experiencing out-of-pocket costs of prescription drugs in excess of $1,400.

Mr. President, the average senior citizen receives from Social Security—make no mistake about it, the average senior citizen only has Social Security to get by on—the average senior citizen gets about $500 a month in Social Security; $500 a month.

What does $1,400 a year mean if you spend $120 a month out of pocket for prescription drugs to stay active, to deal with arthritis, hypertension, and high cholesterol levels, and that is because a 25-percent chunk of their income goes for some 5 million senior citizens to just pay the cost to stay functioning, to stay independent, to stay out of needless institutionalization.

That is what the Senator from Massachusetts and I are giving the Senate a choice on in our amendment. We get rid of the surtax. Our amendment is fiscally responsible. The numbers meet. We will meet the baseline, but we keep those benefits that really touch the largest number of senior citizens and that do them the most good.

Mr. President, it would be a tragedy if we were to simply cut and run on the notion of helping senior citizens. A number of us in this body, the Senator from Minnesota, the Senator from Massachusetts, and others, serve on the Pepper Commission. Our job on the Pepper Commission—I see Senator ROCKEFELLER, the chairman on the floor, our job on the——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HEINZ. May I have 30 additional seconds?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is yielded time.

Mr. HEINZ. Our job on the Pepper Commission is to move forward on long-term. Unless we take positive steps and resist repeal for senior citizens, we are not only taking a step back on long-term care; we may be set back so far we may not be able to take a step forward irrespective of what we might want to do on the Pepper Commission.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has remaining 4 minutes and 20 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thought I would retain that time to respond to some of the points in opposition.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. Is the Senator speaking for or against?

Mr. DURENBERGER. I am going to be speaking against.

Mr. HEINZ. Who has the time in opposition, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia controls the time in opposition if he opposes the amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Parliamentary inquiry. If the Senator from West Virginia is not in opposition to the bill, speaking as the Senator from West Virginia, not representing the Finance Committee——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority leader or his designee, Mr. MCCAIN, controls the time.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I think there has been some confusion here. In an attempt to clarify it, I ask unanimous-consent that I be allowed to control the time in opposition to amendments, the logic being the bill is my bill. I find no objection from my friend from West Virginia and that way I think it makes it a much more clean and efficient debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not according to the usual form, but the Senator makes a unanimous-consent request. Is there objection?

Mr. ROTH. Reserving the right to object, I ask that if the change is made, those of us also in opposition be assured the right that we have an opportunity to comment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that the Senator makes the request with respect to this amendment only or with respect to all amendments?

Mr. McCAIN. All amendments that are under the unanimous-consent agreement. I assure my colleague that he would control the required amount of time.

Mr. ROTH. I also want to ensure that we have a right to comment on the other proposals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears no objection. It is so ordered.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I thank the Chair and I thank my colleagues and I thank particularly the Senator from Arizona for clarifying his very difficult role with regard to all these amendments.

Mr. President, I rise in opposition to this amendment with some regret, particularly because, while in the beginning of the creation of catastrophic, the genesis of this wonderful plan, we did not contemplate adding the drug benefit, I think the drug benefit is a good benefit. I do not think there is any question about it. I compliment my colleagues from Massachusetts and Pennsylvania for doing what they can to try to hang onto this benefit.

So there is no doubt about my particular position on this bill, I agree with the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the previous Secretary of Health and Human Services and the previous President of the United States, who said that the catastrophic bill, despite its financing mechanism, is a very good piece of work for the elderly and disabled of America.

The Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Pennsylvania are trying to say to us one of those elements, the drug benefit, is a very good benefit and we ought to try to hang onto it. I rise only to suggest that there are better ways to provide drug protection or protection for prescription drugs for the elderly of this country than the proposal of my colleagues.

The amendment before us preserves part A of the catastrophic—as do most of the amendments, other than the repealers—preserves home health care, mammograms, and so forth, in addition to drugs. I believe many of the amendments also we will hear today do that. I know that my own amendment does that, preserves part A, preserves home health, preserves mammograms, preserves spousal impoverishment and the like.

The question, very simply, is what do you lose by voting for this amendment? One of the main things that you lose is part B coverage. It does not do much good to pick up part A coverage for 60 days and the 61st through the 365th day in the hospital you lose all your coverage for doctor bills. Those are the people who are in hospitals for a long period of time who also have very large medical bills. And to say that we are going to hang on to part A, but part B we are going to reject is to leave all these same people totally exposed, either personally or to the so-called supplemental market to having to pick up all of those costs.

So I oppose this amendment because it rejects part B, which is the real, genuine, needed by the elderly, by the poor, by the disabled of this country, part of this amendment.

I would also suggest, on the basis of all of the time we have spent in the Finance Committee dealing with the issue of drugs, that now is probably not the best time to adopt a drug amendment. We now know about the drug authorization in the catastrophic bill that would cost somewhere between 30 and 40 percent to administer.

I think we all know from our experience what that means: that if we do not change this drug benefit, if we keep it as a program that is going to cost 30 to 40 percent to administer, sooner or later either the premiums go off the wall so that most elderly cannot afford it or they start opting out of part B and we have not accomplished what we should accomplish.

We need a good drug program. I compliment my colleagues for wanting to hang on to what we have. I would suggest that we can do this prescription drug program better in the future, and I hope the other alternative amendments that do not have the drug benefit in it will be looked at for those of you who want to preserve the good that is in the catastrophic bill.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, just in terms of the time, we have about 4 minutes left. I would like to retain that. Would the Senator answer one or two questions on his time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield, hoping that my friend from Massachusetts would exercise restraint.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How much time does the Senator yield?

Mr. McCAIN. Three minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I must say I was almost prepared to yield 2 minutes for the first 2 minutes of the statement of the Senator from Minnesota, but resisted doing so after that.

What percent of the elderly people do have stopgap insurance for part B? As I understand, it is about 66 percent of the Medicare. And if you include Medicaid, that is about 80 percent of our seniors have some additional coverage other than part B. I agree it is a difficult thing to try and balance one particular benefit versus another. But, we find that you have 2.3 million if we retain the coverage that would have the benefit, while ours, as the Senator from Minnesota said, is about 5.4. We are talking about out-of-pocket expenses.

So will the Senator address that Medigap and the other private insurance?

Mr. DURENBERGER. I will do it very briefly. I think the figures are approximately 60 percent of the Medicare recipients buy supplemental and Medicare picks up part of the gap.

When I came to this body, which was long after the Senator from Massachusetts did, about 10 years ago, that total figure was up somewhere in the neighborhood of 97 percent. The problem is that you cannot buy just catastrophic. You have to buy a lot of other things. And people, in particular poor people, low-income people, people who have disabling injuries and diseases, people who live in rural America, those people cannot afford to buy catastrophic insurance in this current market. And that number keeps getting larger by the hundreds of thousands each year; much quicker than the people who have catastrophic drugs. So those are the people who need catastrophic, that large number that is growing every year that cannot afford to buy these policies in that market.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield on my own time.

In response, I would say, Mr. President, that there are no comparable programs out there now like Medigap in the area that you have prescription drugs. It does not exist. I would agree with my good friend from Minnesota that there is this gradually escalating problem, certainly of importance to me, that we are going to have to agree to down the road.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia asks if he could be yielded 2 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I emphasize again that in general terms I am managing the bill, but I am speaking now as the junior Senator from West Virginia. As I go through all of these amendments, as I understand them to this point, I am inclined to be in favor, in fact I am a cosponsor, of the Durenberger amendment which is yet to be before us.

But I am going to vote for the Kennedy proposal because I think the Kennedy proposal accomplishes a lot of things that would be very satisfactory to our people in West Virginia and across the country. He does, in fact, repeal the supplemental premium. That has been the primary, perhaps, cause of dissatisfaction. He is exactly right when he says drug prescription is not covered under Medigap. He puts it in. He delays it for a year.

That was done before. They were doing that anyway in the original catastrophic bill. And there is the very important aspect of protecting the benefit in the skilled nursing facilities. He grandfathers in those who were already there.

That means the problem of the escalating costs that worries us all so much is not addressed. But he grandfathers and protects those who were there, so people who are in life-threatening situations are not going to be simply pulled out of nursing homes and cast into the cold.

I think there is much to recommend this and I, speaking as the junior Senator from West Virginia, do feel it retains substantial benefits while eliminating the supplemental premium and, therefore, would include myself as one who would be pleased to vote for it.

Mr. HEINZ. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield for 30 seconds?

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time do we have, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 2 minutes and 15 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. I will yield a minute and I will take a minute.

Mr. HEINZ. I will take 30 seconds.

Mr. President, I want to make one thing clear. There are a lot of amendments we are going to be voting on. This amendment does more any way you look at it, more in terms of the amount of benefits quantitatively, more in terms of the amount of people helped, than any other benefit we are voting upon. I think it is fair to say, therefore, that a vote against the Kennedy-Heinz amendment is a vote against helping aged families stay together, stay independent, and a vote for pushing them into poverty and institutionalization.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona.

McCAIN. Mr. President, I applaud my friend from Massachusetts for recognizing the surtax is a crucial issue here. His amendment does eliminate that. I also applaud him for proposing the level of beneficiary responsibility for part of the part B program not fall below 25 percent. I think those are excellent proposals.

However, obviously a centerpiece of this amendment is the prescription drug part of the bill. I think it is of interest to know that several polls, including the Wirthlin poll recently taken, showed only 25 percent of the seniors in America rated drugs as an important provision.

Also I think it is important to reiterate what my friend from Minnesota pointed out, that the dramatic escalation in the cost of prescription drugs indicates that this proposal will pay for it, if at all, for a very short time.

I have a question for my friend from Massachusetts, to ask if he has a CBO estimate of the costs of this amendment and are parts of it already paid for out of general revenues? I think that is an important factor in evaluating this legislation.

Also, I would like to remind my colleagues that an amendment, the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment that was proposed in the House, was their only alternative to total repeal. Basically the centerpiece of that was prescription drugs and that was resoundingly defeated in the House of Representatives.

So I applaud my colleague from Massachusetts for his efforts in particularly some parts of this amendment. I believe it should be overall rejected.

I yield 2 minutes to my colleague from Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, there is no area with more soft data as to cost than the prescription drug benefit.

Let me point out that at the time of passage, according to CBO, prescription drugs were set in at $600, 17 percent of the beneficiaries were supposed to be eligible, at a cost of $6 billion.

Recent estimates say that instead of 17 percent, 33 percent of beneficiaries would be eligible and it would cost $12 billion.

Frankly, nobody has any idea as to how much this program is going to cost.

For example, it is estimated that there could be something like $700 million in claims made under this proposal each year. Whereas we have only $500 million in claims a year under Medicare.

I point out the administrative expenses of this program are tremendous because for each claim, the druggist will be paid $4.50. That means almost $2 billion a year would be paid for administrative expenses.

But the real point is the data is soft. There is a need here but it should be part of a broader study.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I want to make the point that polls may say that seniors do not want prescription drug benefits. I am not sure the polls reflect how much it is that we have communicated to seniors about prescription drugs. But I know when I was having hearings 3 years ago, there were two things that stood out from seniors.

One was, we need help and we want help in terms of being helped with medical catastrophe; and the other was, we want prescription drugs.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will take the last minute.

One is to ask to have the CBO estimates incorporated in the RECORD. The CBO estimates, even with our funding mechanism, would indicate it would be over a $3 billion surplus in the next 4 years, more than a $3 billion surplus.

Second, as has been pointed out we eliminated the surtax.

Third, we maintained the drug benefit.

Fourth, this proposal is supported by the AARP.

Finally, it is fiscally responsible. We put the CBO figures in there.

Mr. President, there will be no other package considered on the floor today that will meet these criteria.

I ask unanimous consent to have the CBO estimates printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 4 minutes 30 seconds.

Mr. McCAIN. Would the Senator from Massachusetts like to have some more time?

Mr. KENNEDY. No. I thank my friend.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield to myself for the time being.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized for 4 minutes and 30 seconds.

Mr. McCAIN. I will not take that amount of time. I want to say briefly, it is important to emphasize that every major seniors organization in America supports the McCain bill except the AARP.

Mr. President, in all due respect for that outstanding organization, I think it is well to point out the AARP is in the prescription drug business, and stands to make millions of dollars if prescription drugs are part of this legislation. I do accuse them of anything except the appearance of a conflict of interest on this issue.

Also, although the CBO estimates may indicate a $3 billion surplus, I find it hard to imagine, with the dramatic cost escalation of these drugs, that that could hold true for very long.

I yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by our distinguished colleague from Massachusetts.

His amendment addresses one of the greatest weaknesses of the alternative proposals to reform the catastrophic bill—the need to extend Medicare coverage to prescription drugs. Only 3 out of every 10 American elderly have coverage for outpatient prescription drugs and if current trends continue there is no reason to believe that number will increase. As our colleague noted in his introductory remarks, this benefit will proportionally serve more elderly than any other component of the catastrophic health care plan.

Compared with other Americans, older persons consume a disproportionately large percentage of prescription drugs. According to the Food and Drug Administration, more than 480 million prescriptions were written for the elderly in 1986. Those elderly who are fortunate enough to be living at home take between two and four prescription drugs daily. And according to the Congressional Budget Office, the average cost of a prescription in 1988 was $17.88. That cost can be expected to rise. In a recent Special Committee on Aging hearing chaired by our distinguished colleague from Arkansas, it was made clear that drug prices have risen faster than other consumer prices. In fact, from January 1980 through 1986, drug prices rose almost 80 percent—250 percent faster than the increase in consumer prices in general.

While we have a responsibility to control the growth of costs in pharmaceuticals, we also have a responsibility to assure that senior citizens have access to those therapeutics. As prices soar, the need for Medicare reimbursement for outpatient prescription drugs becomes even more severe for those millions of American elderly living on fixed incomes. There are few things as tragic as the thought of an elderly patient refusing to fill a much needed prescription simply because of inability to pay. And that denial of appropriate care can only cost us more in the long run.

So I commend my colleague from Massachusetts for his leadership with this amendment. It is this Senator's opinion that as we struggle to balance the needs for these benefits against the costs, that we must do all that we can to salvage those benefits that will provide the most assistance and will be of the greatest value to the largest number of American elderly. And in the case of this amendment, we can do that without dependence on the surtax which has proven to be so unacceptable to so many seniors.

I urge my colleagues' support of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time is yielded back.

The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second?

Obviously, there is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will please repeat the responses. The clerk will call the roll.

NOT VOTING—1
Matsunaga

So the amendment (No. 985) was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP], is to be recognized at this time for the purpose of proposing an amendment.

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, it is almost 2 years to the day that the Senate first voted for the Medicare catastrophic benefit legislation. This was the first step toward the passage of what was believed to be a much needed and valuable health benefit for our senior citizens. However, this legislation has been surrounded with controversy since that vote 2 years ago. Many senior citizens have besieged us with petitions, letters, and phone calls in opposition to the program. When I held a town meeting in Sundance, WY, several weeks ago, the major issue among my constituents was the Catastrophic Health Program.

The reason for their displeasure is simple. Senior citizens do not support the method used to finance the benefit. More than one-half of the program's costs are to be funded by a special income-based surtax on seniors. They have looked at the benefits, and decided that an $800 surtax—the maximum rate—was too much. This was the starting point for the debate.

But the debate has not served us well. There has been much misinformation and disinformation involving this program. And we, the Congress, have responded to this confusion with efforts to repeal or restructure the catastrophic benefit.

Beyond the precedent of repealing a major social insurance benefit, I have a concern about the message we may be sending on funding Federal social programs. When we passed the catastrophic health coverage, we decided that those who benefit from the coverage must pay the cost. The day is long gone when we can provide new promises, new benefits without worrying how to finance them.

We have no excess general revenues. We do have a $3 trillion deficit. Taxpayers strongly oppose new general taxes. If we are going to enact new social insurance programs, then the users must pay.

The Roosevelt Group, the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, has led the attack on this benefit. They have not always been accurate, and that has been unfortunate for this debate. They did recently conduct a poll of senior citizens on this issue. About two-thirds of the respondents said they opposed the catastrophic surtax. But, they also supported the benefits provided by the program and did not want to pay more than the flat premium. This flat premium only funds 40 percent of the program costs. We cannot possibly provide these benefits with just a flat premium, so we would have to resort to general revenues. We are being driven in a dangerous direction.

The current situation is that while we think we know what senior citizens want in the way of catastrophic health benefits, we have no idea about how to pay for whatever benefits we legislate. At some point in the not too distant future, we will be asked to provide a long-term care benefit for the elderly. I frankly do not know how we are going to resolve that issue after the fiasco involving this catastrophic benefit.

I voted for the catastrophic benefit twice, though my second vote was certainly reluctant. The benefit does make sense in concept, but we erred in adopting too much of the House language relative to financing and to mandatory coverage. The Senate had directed us toward a voluntary program with a reasonable financing procedure. During the Senate debate, I offered a proposal to make the catastrophic care benefit a separate, voluntary election by senior citizens.

I have no doubt that if my proposal had been adopted, we would not be here today. The uproar we are now trying to quell is a response to the surtax. Many elderly are not convinced that the package of benefits they receive is worth the cost. At the same time, many senior citizens poorly understand the program.

Last year, I surveyed Wyoming senior citizens. The survey outlined the benefits and provided a worksheet to calculate individual premium and surtax costs. The 65 percent of my senior constituents who responded, support the program. And, they approved of the proposal to make it voluntary. My voluntary approach has always been the obvious solution.

The Part B Program is already voluntary. It is funded by a premium, as is the catastrophic benefit. Ninety-five percent of the elderly participate in part B. I would expect a similar participation rate for the catastrophic benefit. I have sought a cost estimate of my proposal, and have just been informed that the analysis of voluntary options has not been completed. So, we cannot argue numbers at this point.

Beyond cost, the other objection to my proposal is that seniors will engage in adverse selection. That is, they will not participate in the program until they need the benefit. But, adverse selection could be settled by prohibiting participation once an individual elected not to participate.

I will not offer my amendment to make the catastrophic health benefit voluntary. We should have approved it 2 years ago. We would not be here today if we had done so.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator WALLOP, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] is now recognized for the purpose of introducing an amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I have two amendments listed. The first relates to a comprehensive proposal.

I ask unanimous consent to waive the offering of amendment No. 3 on the unanimous-consent list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Amendment No. 4, Mr. President, is in the nature of a perfecting amendment at such time as we reach an amendment which would retain a portion of the surtax. In looking at the amendments that are available presently, the only amendment that meets that standard is the amendment that will be offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

So I ask unanimous consent that my amendment No. 4 be reordered to come immediately after the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCAIN. Reserving the right to object, if I could have the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON], who is in the Chamber, Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator is aware of the request being propounded by the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM], since I know he had great concern last night about the order of amendments.

Mr. President, pending approval of that unanimous-consent request, until I have a chance to talk to Mr. ROTH and Mr. DANFORTH, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: Is the time elapsing now being taken off my time on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time elapsing on the quorum call is normally charged to the Senator who requested it. However, the unanimous-consent request obviated that need. In this case, the time has not been subtracted, I say to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Thank you, Mr. President.

I wonder if the Senator from Florida is ready to proceed.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am ready, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized. The Chair advises the Senator that he has a pending unanimous-consent request.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, if I could restate the nature of the amendment that I will offer, which is inferred by the statement in the unanimous consent, which states that if there is no repeal, then it establishes a condition for voluntary opting out.

So my amendment is not a free-standing amendment but rather would be only relevant if we were to adopt as a basic position a financing plan which included a surtax on income tax, as does the current alternative.

Since the only alternative that has now a provision is the one being offered by the Senator from Minnesota, I am asking unanimous consent that I be placed in a position in the order after the Senator from Minnesota and, based on conversations with others who have an interest in this, apparently the most appropriate place would be immediately after the Danforth-Roth amendment.

So my specific request would be to allow this amendment to be taken up immediately after the Danforth-Roth amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. GRAHAM. Given that, I intend to offer the amendment to the bill of the Senator from Arizona. I am frankly befuddled as to why it could not be offered at an appropriate place but that is not for me to decide.

AMENDMENT NO. 986

(Purpose: To provide modified benefit package for individuals having private insurance)

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I send the amendment to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] proposes an amendment numbered 986.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. MODIFIED BENEFIT PACKAGE FOR INDIVIDUALS HAVING PRIVATE INSURANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle C of title XVIII is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"MODIFIED BENEFIT PACKAGE FOR INDIVIDUALS HAVING PRIVATE INSURANCE

"SEC. 1893. (a) Upon request made by an individual, in such manner and including such information as the Secretary may require, the Secretary shall determine whether such individual is entitled to hospital insurance benefits and supplementary medical insurance benefits under any benefit plan other than this title, which are equal to or greater than the benefits added by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, as amended. If the Secretary makes an affirmative determination with respect to such individual, such individual shall not be entitled under this title to such benefits, and shall not be required to pay the premium under section 59B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and the premium under section 1839(g) of this title, for so long as such individual continues to be entitled to such benefits under such other plan.

"(b) An individual may request the Secretary to determine whether such individual has ceased to be entitled to such benefits under such plan, or the Secretary may make such a determination on the Secretary's own motion. If such a determination is made, such individual shall thereafter be entitled to such benefits, and shall be required to pay the premium determined under section 59B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and the premium under section 1839(g) of this title.".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply with respect to items and services furnished in, and premiums payable for, months beginning on or after November 1, 1989.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to provide an option through which individuals who currently have coverage which is essentially equivalent to that which will be provided under the plan, speaking to the plan as proposed by the Senator from Arizona, would have a means of opting out.

It essentially states that upon request by an individual in such manner, including such information as the Secretary of HHS may require, the Secretary shall determine whether such individual is entitled to hospital insurance benefits and supplementary medical insurance benefits under any benefit plan other than that provided in this title which are equal to or greater than the benefits added by this title.

If he makes such an affirmative determination, then that individual would be in a position to make a voluntary election to opt out of both benefits and payments under this plan.

At the present time, under employer-paid insurance, 11 percent of the plans in force have a fully employer-paid set of retirement benefits which would meet the test of being substantially equivalent to or greater than the benefits which are offered under the current law. So by definition they would meet the standards offered by the Senator from Arizona since his benefits are somewhat less than the current law.

Twelve percent have benefits which are partially paid by the employer, and 6 percent have employer-based plans but in which the employee makes the full payment.

It has been estimated that up to 5 to 7 million of the persons covered by the current catastrophic care plan already have, either through their previous employment or by private action, a plan which would meet the test of being essentially equivalent to that which has been provided under the 1988 catastrophic care plan.

I want to anticipate an argument, and that is the argument of adverse selection, that you are going to have people who are the healthiest, wealthiest, opt out of the plan, leaving the least able and the greatest in need to have to carry the load.

This is not an opt out plan that can be done on one's individual initiative. You have to meet the first threshold of demonstrating that you already have in place coverage that is essentially equivalent or greater than coverage which is being provided under this title. I believe that is the protection relative to the adverse selection argument.

I also underscore that, in most of these instances, these are plans which were provided for while a person was prior to retirement, while they were still in their working years, whether they were working for a private employer, or many government agencies, including the Federal Government, which have programs that provide for this type of coverage after retirement.

So the decision was not based on a health condition or an income condition at the time of retirement, but rather was made at a much earlier stage of life. Therefore, there is no reason to believe that the pool of people who will be eligible to opt out are essentially a different pool of people than the general population that will be covered by this catastrophic program, whatever form it finally takes.

Mr. President, I urge the consideration of this, what I think is just a basic fairness principle of not requiring people who have already paid to have to pay again.

Mr. McCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, first, I want to say to my colleague from Florida that I did not object to the consideration of this because I have no respect for him. I think the issue can be dealt with, and the great concern for those of us, who were here at midnight last night trying to put this in order, is that if we agreed to one change, we may be here all afternoon agreeing to similar changes.

I have a great deal of respect for his judgment about health insurance matters in general, not only because of the State that he represents, but because of the work he did as a Governor.

I want to say two or three things about this. First, this debate we engaged in last year when we had the catastrophic before us, because there were other proposals similar to the proposal by the Senator from Florida that we provide opt out in the catastrophic part of this bill.

At that time, we had before us a rather large volume of actuarial information, which I do not presently have available to me, providing why, given the existing insurance market, both the employer-based retiree market that the Senator from Florida has talked to us about, the Medigap or supplemental market, and the current Medicare Program, the so-called adverse selection problem was a very real problem.

So on that ground alone, I think this amendment should fall. I would like to make an additional comment, and I hope that it would be a reassuring comment to my colleague from Florida, that all of us on the Finance Committee and all the others who have dealt with this issue are deeply concerned about the problems of duplicate coverage.

When I look at the advertisement, or copy of the advertisement that our colleague from Arizona sent to us all yesterday from USA Today, this list of people who belonged to the Coalition of Affordable Health Care, it looks lke 75 to 80 percent of these associations have something to do with government employees.

These people have a real problem. It a very serious problem if you are retiree, and health benefits are guaranteed for you, and then you have to pay either a flat premiun or a flat premium plus a supplemental. So there is real concern on the part of these people.

As the Senator from Florida pointed out, there is another 10 or 11 percent of people in the private-sector employment who are guaranteed very generous retirement benefits, many of which have major medical and more catastrophic. So for that reason, my amendment, all of the amendments considered in the Finance Committee, none of which are yet before us, and I think most of the amendments that we will be talking about today, will have in them an opt-out feature, so that people are able to opt out of the part B side of this plan and go back to their regular plan, their regular plan of coverage.

I think that, at least to a degree, should provide some assurance to my colleague. I must say, beyond that, in my amendment, we will be looking at a flat premium, which is the current $4 premium, and we will be looking at a supplemental premium, which is about 400 percent reduced from the original premium that upset a lot of these people.

We are looking at a tax which, at the most, will be $200, $250 a year. I think with that in mind, plus the opt out feature that is contained in my amendment—and I believe it is in the amendment of the Senator from Arizona—that there is not going to be any reason to suggest to people in the United States that they ought to try to opt out just of the catastrophic portion of this plan, because they will find that that is not to their economic advantage.

I think we will find that those who do not find that out, who go the wrong way on the street, as the Senator from Texas was talking about earlier, their getting out of Medicare is going to raise the premiums for everybody else and create a substantial adverse selection problem.

So for that reason and, again, restating my respect for my colleague from Florida, I do believe that we should oppose this amendment, and I think as time goes on this afternoon, we will see that his concerns are addressed in other ways.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ROCKEFELLER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the distinguished Senator from Arizona. I ask the Senator from Florida if he has checked with the Social Security Administration to find out if they think they can make these equivalency comparisons in sufficient time.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not made any independent assessment of the Social Security Administration's ability to do this, but I cannot imagine that that is beyond their managerial capabilities.

The vast number of the people who will be covered by this have coverage from a relatively small number of insurance plans or prior employer-based plans. I do not believe that this is an undue administrative burden on the Social Security Administration, in order to save the burden of duplicative coverage for some 5 million to 7 million potential beneficiaries.

Here are people who have given up income during their working years, in order to have included in their retirement program this benefit, and now we are essentially telling them that that did not count, that your prudence in preparing for the future was wasted, because now we are going to make you pay a second time for a second and unnecessary level of coverage.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I understand what the distinguished Senator is saying. My understanding is that the Social Security Administration is not equipped, in terms of money and personnel, to do that at this point. That is what they tell us. I think beyond that, there is concern.

Let us say you are looking for or described what is equivalent, what is fair, and try to measure it. Federal employees already have that problem, and they either realize their situation or they do not. What if you had, let us say, two plans for home health care, but one plan had a few more days than another. What do you answer? Is that equivalent?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not saying we need to repeal the standard of judgment. We are placing our faith in the Secretary of HHS to be able to develop some standards by which judgments will be made as to whether these plans were essentially equivalent or greater than the benefits that are to be provided under what is left of the catastrophic health care plan.

I do not think that is a space rocket type intellectual exercise to ask the Secretary to undertake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. McCAIN. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona controls 6 minutes and 40 seconds; the Senator from Florida controls 10 minutes and 49 seconds.

Mr. McCAIN. Does the Senator from Florida care to make further use of his time?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield for questions?

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield.

Mr. DASCHLE. I am sorry that I have not followed the text of the amendment as well as I should have.

What happens in the case where a person opts out and then, for whatever reasons, decides down the road also to get out of the plan that he is in, that he opts out of the voluntary plan as well and decides to have no coverage?

Mr. GRAHAM. Under section B of this proposal, if a person no longer meets the test of having such an equivalent or greater coverage, then he loses his opportunity to voluntarily opt out of the catastrophic health care.

Mr. DASCHLE. That is what I thought. If the Senator will yield, that is what I assumed. I would assume then that there is some device by which the Government would know that that person no longer has coverage. What device is that?

Mr. GRAHAM. It can be either through the individual coming to the Secretary and making a recommendation of coverage upon which my voluntary opt out had been predicated no longer exists, or the Secretary may make his own determination that there has been a failure of coverage. For instance, if coverage for a group of individuals—and I think this is a typical case—had been provided by a particular insurance company, and it is known to the Secretary of HHS that that insurance company is now in liquidation and is unable to make its financial commitments, then there would be the class where people whose ability to opt out have been predicated on that company's financial capability would no longer be eligible to opt out of the program.

Mr. DASCHLE. I would be very concerned, I suppose, about the responsibility that the insurance companies in this case would have.

Mr. GRAHAM. I really think, if I could say, that if the argument is that the Social Security Administration cannot administer a reasonable plan to avoid duplication of coverage, a situation in which some 5 to 7 million people find themselves, then that raises the fundamental question of whether they are capable of administering the much more complex provisions of the bill itself.

Mr. DASCHLE. If the Senator will yield on that I realize I may be speaking as someone in opposition to his amendment and he has no reason necessarily to yield to me, but the plan does deal with it in two ways.

First of all, it makes it clear that duplicate coverage is illegal when this plan is implemented entirely. That is No. 1. You are not allowed to offer duplicate coverage. And the second is, in those cases where Federal employees in particular paid in, there is a rebate provision. Each month those who have paid in are rebated whatever amount was paid in. It is $3 a month at this point.

So in my view it is probably as reasonable approach to duplicative coverage, either prospective or current, that I can think of and probably deals with the issue as effectively as one might expect under these circumstances.

Mr. GRAHAM. You can make duplicate coverage in the future illegal by saying thou shalt not buy or sell coverage that will duplicate what is currently available under this Government-mandated program. You may single out for special privileges Federal employees. But what do you do about those tens of thousands of people who were employees of the State of New York or of other large public employers or private employers?

Under the current part A some 27 or 28 percent of the American employees in their current benefits package every month are taking less salary so there can be funds placed in that for their benefits upon retirement.

As to those who were in that situation in the 1950's, 1960's, 1970's and 1980's, before this Government met, how do you go back and make the world fair to them? I believe the way you make the world fair to them is to give them an opportunity to come to the administrator of this program, the Secretary of HHS, and say, "Look, I have the same coverage I have already paid for; why are you making me pay twice?" And if they determine that that is in fact the case, let them make a voluntary judgment that they want to opt out.

Mr. DASCHLE. If the Senator will yield one last time, and he has certainly studied the issue thoroughly, you can do it at either end. You can either do it on the benefits side or the payments side. The current program has chosen to do it on the payments side.

It does allow, and I just clarified this with staff to insure I am right, not only Federal employees but all employees who have paid prospectively to be eligible for a rebate benefit on a monthly basis to ensure that they are not paying for duplicate coverage. They already paid it. Why should they have to pay now? That is the whole essence behind this rebate program.

If we can toughen it up in some way, let us try that as our option. We have one of two choices. Certainly from an insurance side, a coverage side, it makes more sense to do it on payment than it does on the benefit, given the fact, as the Senator has illustrated, there really is not any way of ensuring that once a person opts out he continues to retain the kind of benefits we are talking about here in the program originally.

Mr. GRAHAM. No. 1, I do not believe that the administrative complexities of this narrow opt-out provision are nearly the scale of the administration of the basic program that we are now determining whether it should be continued or not.

No. 2, I believe we are talking about an issue of fundamental fairness. These people want to opt out on both sides. Yes; they want to opt out having to pay a second time, but they are also prepared to opt out getting any benefits. They do not want a free ride. They just do not want to have to pay twice to get on the same bus.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time,

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. President, I have concern about this amendment because it seems to me it runs into several problems.

I am troubled, for example, by the language:

> If the Secretary makes an affirmative determination with respect to such an individual, such individual shall not be entitled under this title to such benefits.

That is a little bit more than asking about equivalency. That concerns me very much.

I also am concerned that the Feds are going to be getting into the business of setting standards with respect to insurance. I know that the Senator from Florida understands, having been a distinguished Governor for 8 years, that the Federal Government does not do that for private insurance. It is the States that do that. One can argue whether or not that is correct, but nevertheless it is the law. So that seems to me the general concern I would feel about the administrative cumbersomeness of all of this.

Second, it is, I think, much more restrictive and mandatory and tends perhaps not in the interest of the individual trying to consider what plan he might have or might want, and I also think that it is much too heavy handed, too much of Uncle Sam trying to move in, kind of a section 89 type problem, and for that reason, Mr. President, I oppose the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 4 minutes and 40 seconds remaining.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, first of all, I thank the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM], who has been heavily involved in this issue. He has been extremely sensitive to the seniors of his State. He was one of the first to recognize that this legislation needed fundamental changing.

It has been a privilege for me to have an opportunity to work with him as we try to wend our way through this maze, and at least we are about halfway through at this time. That is why I regret opposing this amendment particularly on the grounds, as the Senator from Florida stated, it would have been far more appropriate and probably supportable if full repeal had been voted. I regret he was forced to propose this amendment at this particular time because in fact the mandatory nature of the act, if the legislation stands, is gone under the present bill, because the surtax would be eliminated and we would know that part B is indeed optional.

I wish to also point out that this amendment gives options to individuals who appeal to the Secretary of HHS to opt out of the catastrophic plan if they can demonstrate they already have retiree health benefits. This option does not address the core issue that is involved in today's debate; that is, the catastrophic act provides seniors the benefits they do not want with a financing plan they do not like, and they do not like the Government mandating participation in the program.

The Graham amendment, in some respects, given the state of the legislation at this point, just adds a new regulatory wrinkle. If a senior can demonstrate to the bureaucracy of HHS that they have a benefit, then the participant may get a waiver that will cost administratively, and I do not think it will provide a guarantee to seniors.

I say to the Senator from Florida, I do not know how the legislation today is going to come out. If it is total repeal, I suggest we are going to be back revisiting this issue again.

I suggest that at that time I would certainly support an amendment or a piece of legislation along these lines that the Senator from Florida is contemplating. Because if we do totally repeal, Mr. President, we will be revisiting this issue because there will be 60 percent of the seniors who do not pay a surtax at this time who will be outraged by the fact that they are going to be deprived the benefits.

So I say to my friend from Florida, I reluctantly oppose this amendment. I understand his thrust here. If there is total repeal, I look forward to joining him in reinitiating this kind of legislation, because I think at that point it would have great potency and persuasive power.

Mr. President, unless the Senator from Minnesota would care to speak I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has yielded back the remainder of his time.

The Senator from Florida has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, to close, I believe that the most significant aspect of the debate that we have heard on this relatively focused, narrow amendment is a frontal attack on this program in its totality.

If you are telling me that there can be serious questions as to whether the Secretary of HHS can be given the authority to make a determination as to whether an individual, who requests that he do so, holds equivalent insurance coverage from another source, there is that doubt about the Secretary's level of administrative competence to make that decision, how in the world can we even start the debate that indicates that he should be given the range of administrative responsibility which the current law and which most of the amendments that we are going to consider later today would provide?

Second, in response to the comments of the Senator from West Virginia, I would point out that the first phrase of that is "upon request made by an individual." So the process does not start until the individual makes the determination that they want it to start. This is not the Government coming in and putting its hands around the throat of an unwilling individual. In fact, it is a means by which the Government's hands are around the throats of people, who are unwilling because they have already paid, before they can be given some relief.

I do not consider it to be even intellectually credible to say that we are going to provide them relief by allowing them to opt out of part B.

Ninety-nine percent of older Americans make the election to be in part B, that is the portion of medicare which provides for basic physicians benefits. And to say that, in order to get out of this catastrophic plan because the person has already paid for that coverage, they then have to give up their physicians benefits program is no option at all. And clearly, it will be seen as that by senior Americans.

Mr. President, we are trying to fashion a program which balances some very difficult and maybe inherently contradictory features. It is a mandatory program. It is a program in which, whether one has previously provided for those benefits or not, is largely disregarded. It is a program which, within that mandatory framework, there is a considerable degree of income redistribution as to who will pay the cost.

It is the first time in American social policy that we have had such a program paid for totally by the beneficiaries and then made the beneficiaries internally redistribute for purposes of income inequities. Those are some very fundamental new concepts that have brought this legislation into such national disrepute.

I personally—and I am more persuaded of this position after having heard the low level of confidence of the administration in this program—I am even more inclined to vote for repeal. But if we do not repeal, at least we ought to let those people who have already paid once not be forced to pay again.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

The question now occurs on the amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now occurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM]. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA], is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. MIKULSKI). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

MOTION TO COMMIT WITH INSTRUCTIONS

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, I send a motion to commit to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], for himself, Mr. LEVIN, and Mr. METZENBAUM moves to commit to the Committee on Finance S. 1726 with instructions that the committee report the bill back to the Senate, within 20 days, with a committee amendment that does the following:

(1) Repeals the Supplemental Medicare Premium Surtax enacted in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

(2) Extends the maximum marginal income tax rate of 33 percent to those very high income taxpayers who are currently paying a marginal income tax rate of 28 percent following the phase-out for them of the personal exemption and the 15 percent bracket.

(3) Retains the Medicare flat monthly premium as enacted in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

(4) Retains the Medicaid benefits provided under the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

(5) Retains as many of the non-Medicaid benefits provided under the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 as can be financed through subsections (2) and (3) provided that program costs do not exceed revenues generated through subsections (2) and (3).

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, might I inquire, how much time is under my control?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, this amendment has 1 hour of debate equally divided among proponents and opponents. The Senator from Iowa controls one-half hour.

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, I yield myself 10 minutes at the beginning.

I want to add that I send this motion to the desk on behalf of Senator LEVIN, Senator METZENBAUM, and myself.

Madam President, my colleagues in the Senate, I have met with and heard thousands of senior citizens in my State who have told me that they want the flawed financing of catastrophic benefits corrected. They have not been asking me to scope all of the benefits but they believe the way the benefits are financed is patently unfair.

Madam President, I could not agree more that the present financing mechanism is patently unfair and that is why we introduced a bill last July to take care of this. That legislation is a constructive solution to the dilemma we find ourselves in by allowing us to preserve the benefits and eliminate the surtax while not adding to the deficit over the long run.

Under our proposal, and the motion to commit that we have sent to the desk, senior citizens would still contribute substantially to the financing of the new benefits—about one-third of the total cost through the part B catastrophic premiums. However, the surtax would be eliminated and replaced by an extension of the 33-percent tax rate to the highest income taxpayers.

Madam President, we all know that under current law there is the anomaly of the so-called bubble where joint filing taxpayers pay a maringal tax rate of 33 percent on taxable incomes of $78,000 to $208,000, and single taxpayers pay 33 percent on taxable income of $47,000 to $109,000, but above that they only pay 28 percent. What that means is, the more you make, the less you pay. In other words, the 600,000 highest earning taxpayers pay a maximum of 28 percent marginal taxes no matter how much income they earn. This is unfair. Our proposal eliminates this unfairness and raises the revenue necessary to fund the catastrophic benefits.

It is unfair to require the senior citizens of this Nation to bear the full cost of the benefits they receive under the program. We do not do this to recipients of other Government programs. Farmers do not bear the full cost of the interest on their guaranteed student loans, and under the basic Medicare Program itself the elderly do not shoulder the entire cost of benefits. In all of these cases, we, the people of this country, have made a judgment that these are valuable benefits, benefits which all of us as taxpayers must have a hand in paying for, because in every way that you look at it we all benefit from these programs. Catastrophic coverage should be no different because we all benefit, not just the elderly.

I agree with those seniors who contend that we violated the traditional social insurance concept in this country when we heeded Ronald Reagan's dictum that he would only sign catastrophic care legislation if all of the benefits were paid for by the beneficiaries.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD the Reagan administration's letter that was sent to the House minority leader, ROBERT MICHEL, saying that he would veto the catastrophic bill unless it was fully financed by the elderly.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 21, 1987.

HON. ROBERT MICHEL,
House Republican Leader, House of Representatives, Washington DC.

DEAR MR. LEADER: H.R. 2470, the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act of 1987, scheduled for House floor consideration this week, is totally unacceptable to the Administration. Unless the concerns discussed below are addressed in a satisfactory manner, we will recommend to the President that he veto this bill.

H.R. 2470 would undermine last year's historic tax reform by levying a new surtax on the nation's social security recipients. Unlike the Administration's simple premium approach, this series of income-related rates would substantially increase the tax burden and filing complexity for our Nation's elderly and disabled. With this surtax, and the premium increases in the bill, social security recipients would pay, on average, $700 in 1989 for Medicare coverage, a 150 percent increase. By the year 2000, a beneficiary's Medicare payment needed to finance the bill's benefit expansions would be in excess of $1,200 per social security recipient.

Morover, H.R. 2470 has become a vehicle for modifications and add-ons to Medicare. These major unrelated provisions go well beyond acute care, catastrophic coverage and jeopardize our mutual objective of assuring that social security recipients have catastrophic coverage.

The result: greatly increased future budget deficits and an unstable Medicare program. The substantial add-ons, combined with a lower out-of-pocket threshold that increases at a much slower rate than program costs, result in cost increases that quickly outpace the bill's financing. Estimates by the Medicare actuary and Treasury indicate that by the mid-1990s costs will begin to exceed revenues, with a shortfall of about $8 billion likely by the year 2000. Indeed by the year 2005, the total costs of the bill, including a drug benefit, would be close to $100 billion, adding $20 billion to the deficit.

H.R. 2470's shortfall would further threaten Medicare's solvency. The elderly and disabled will once again be faced with uncertainty regarding the solvency of their health insurance plan. This must—and can—be avoided. Any catastrophic insurance plan must be fully self-financed, such as the plan proposed by the President.

Our major concerns with the bill include the following:

A staggering long-term tax and premium increase on the middle income elderly and disabled;

Use of a complicated and unnecessary surtax in the income tax code as a means of financing the expansion of Medicare;

The outpatient Medicare prescription drug amendment. This major expansion of Medicare would prohibitively increase costs unrelated to financial catastrophes;

The inclusion of additional expansions of Medicare beyond acute care catastrophic coverage. For example, the addition of a respite (in-home) care benefit and the expansions of skilled nursing facility and outpatient mental health coverage will cause outyear costs to increase substantially;

Other changes unrelated to acute care protection such as requiring the States to pay Medicare deductibles, premiums, and copayments for elderly not now covered; and

The additional deficits, growing over time, because the bill is actuarially unsound.

If the bill in its current form is presented to the President, we would have no alternative but to recommend that he veto the measure. Acceptable catastrophic legislation must not involve a tax increase, must be self-financed on an actuarial and budgetary basis, and should be focused exclusively on acute care, catastrophic health costs.

Sincerely,

Otis R. Bowen, M.D., Secretary, Department of Health and Human Services; James C. Miller III, Director, Office of Management and Budget; James A. Baker III, Secretary, Department of the Treasury; William E. Brock III, Secretary, Department of Labor.

Mr. HARKIN. I also do not agree with those who believe the best solution is now to scrap the program entirely and go back to the drawing board. The benefits are worth preserving, and I find it quite disheartening that none of the proposals before us today will keep the benefits intact. All of the proposals in front of us today cut the benefits in one way or another.

Yes, I believe the surtax should be repealed, but it is also important to remember that 19 million of the elderly who will receive catastrophic benefits under the law will not pay any surtax. Another 4 million will pay under $100. I believe we must recognize that we have not heard hardly anything from those 23 million elderly, most of whom have relatively little in the way of resources to pay huge medical costs, but do need the benefits provided by the Catastrophic Coverage Act. I repeat, 23 million elderly Americans are either paying no surtax or paying less than $100 a year.

Madam President, the motion to commit the legislation with instructions is quite simple. It directs the Finance Committee to report back to the Senate legislation which would preserve as many of the Catastrophic Coverage Act benefits as is possible and finance those benefits by raising the tax rate from 28 to 33 percent for the highest earning taxpayers of this country—600,000 taxpayers.

Madam President, preserving the benefits, I believe, in their totality will be possible by using this increase in taxes and looking at perhaps something else like delaying or raising the part B cap on out-of-pocket expenses.

Before concluding, I also want to note that our proposal was the first one to modify the financing of the catastrophic bill to receive the support of a large number of groups representing the elderly as well as workers and retired workers. These groups include the National Council of Senior Citizens, the Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, the National Association of Letter Carriers, the National Council on the Aging, the United Auto Workers, the International Ladies Garment Workers' Union, the American Postal Workers Union, AFSCME, the Communications Workers of America, and the Grey Panthers. All support the motion that Senator LEVIN and I have sent to the desk. This offers us the opportunity to act in a straightforward, fiscally and socially responsible manner to resolve the problems caused by the self-financing mechanism of the catastrophic bill. It offers real tax relief to older Americans.

I know we are going to hear from some that this proposal raises taxes. Well, it is like looking at a glass of water that is half full. Is it half full or half empty? The fact is the proposal that Senator LEVIN and I have put forward reduces taxes for over 14 milion Americans—14 million elderly people who are now paying the highest marginal rates of any segment of our population. Elderly people, many of whom are out there working to make a few extra bucks to supplement their Social Security, are now paying marginal rates in excess of 40 percent and yet the Donald Trumps and others are paying marginal rates of 28 percent. This is patently unfair. What Senator LEVIN and I are saying in our motion to recommit is simply to extend the same tax rate middle-income Americans are paying to those 600,000 Americans that are making over $209,000 a year and at the same time reduce taxes for over 14 million Americans who are now in their retirement years.

I believe we have a responsibility to make sure that we are true to the ideals of social insurance, that it is broadly based. That is what this does, to make sure that we are fair to the elderly, to make sure we reduce their taxes, which this does, and to make sure that we keep as many of the benefits as possible that are now in the catastrophic care bill.

Madam President, how much time have I consumed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eight minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. McCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. I yield myself 4 minutes.

I say there are several of my colleagues who said they wanted to speak on this amendment on this side. I urge them to come to the floor at this time, since we will be continuing with this amendment.

I would like to thank my friend from Iowa, Senator HARKIN, for all of the wonderful things he has done for seniors in the country, including our disabled American citizens; and his concern and his commitment is well known to all of us.

I believe this amendment, however, is one which could be described as extremely radical in that we would be basically abrogating the principle upon which the catastrophic insurance bill was passed. That was, as we all know, the beneficiary pays. In fact, that is the reason why we created the fire storm which has resulted in why we are here today.

I am not particularly academically or intellectually qualified to say whether that was a right policy decision or not. But that decision was made by the majority of both Houses of Congress and the administration, and was an integral and fundamental part of the Medicare Catastrophic Health Insurance Act of 1988.

So I suggest to my colleagues that in the form of a motion to commit which we are considering at this time we are basically repudiating the overriding philosophy of the financing of catastrophic health insurance for our senior citizens.

My point is I do not think we are prepared to make that decision on a motion to commit to the Finance Committee. Since a year ago at least the Finance Committee made clear the decision that it would be beneficiaries who pay for the benefits that would accrue from this program.

I think clearly it is a tax increase. I understand the logic of my friend from Iowa, that you are taking taxes from the elderly and putting them on rich Americans. But it also I think is clearly a tax increase.

It is one that again I say should probably be considered in a different format and a different forum than this one.

In point of fact, for taxpayers who have taxable income of $140,000 or less the average tax rate is 27.7 percent or less. In other words, middle-income taxpayers pay a lower average rate than high-income taxpayers, in my view.

I share the dilemma of my friend from Iowa, who states that the surtax is unacceptable. I agree with that, that the surtax indeed has to be eliminated, and I would also say that I share the view completely with my friend from Iowa and the cosponsor, Senator LEVIN who also strongly believed that benefits must be preserved.

I have said time after time after time that perhaps one of the most intense parts of this debate will be over the issue of whether we need to totally repeal this legislation or not. In my view, as the Senator from Iowa pointed out, some 60 percent of the beneficiaries of this program pay no surtax at all.

I am sure in the event of total repeal they will be heard from, and understandably so when they discover that benefits which they thought they were receiving have now been totally repealed, albeit some of them repealed over time.

Madam President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Presiding Officer advises that you have 26 minutes left.

Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from Michigan yield for a question or two?

Mr. HARKIN. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. In response to my friend from Arizona, he is talking about who is bearing the burden of the payment for these programs. I commend the Senators from Iowa and Michigan for the way they have developed this program.

Under the program that was supported by President Reagan, for every senior citizen, who is paying income tax, I ask the question of my friend from Iowa, their taxes would have gone up 28 percent. We had an administration that was prepared to see a 28-percent increase for the seniors who pay any tax at all, and yet we have those now that are opposing a 5-percent stabilizing or an increase on the wealthiest individuals in our country.

Do I understand the tax implications correctly in terms of what would be the ultimate result, plus preserve, as I understand, the overwhelming amount of the benefits included in the catastrophic?

Mr. HARKIN. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts is absolutely correct. I had not thought of it in that way. He is absolutely right; they are willing to raise them by 28 percent, but we are only asking for a 5-percent increase on it.

Mr. KENNEDY. I think that is the point that should be understood, Mr. President, because we hear a great deal of tax talk about taxes, and who is bearing and who should bear the burden. There was no hesitancy by the previous administration to divert our seniors on that, but with the Harkin-Levin amendment, we are virtually freeing ourselves or the elderly from that particular burden and shifting it, so to speak, on the wealthiest individuals in our society.

For that reason, and for the restoration of the benefits, I think the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Michigan deserve great commendation. I look forward to supporting it, and I urge our colleagues to support it.

Mr. HARKIN. I appreciate the Senator from Massachusetts shedding that light on it. That is an important point. I had not thought of it. I thank him for pointing that out.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. HARKIN. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, this amendment does a number of things, some of which I think there is a great deal of agreement on in this Chamber. Most importantly, it repeals a very odious surtax, an unfair surtax, a surtax which has caused a great deal of anxiety among our senior citizens.

It is unfair, simply unfair, to tax 40 percent or more of our senior citizens as we have done, a surtax on their income tax, to pay for this program when most of them will be paying far more in taxes each year than is the value of the benefits of this program to them. For that large number of seniors, this is not a benefits program. This is not a catastrophic health program. This is a tax bill.

We advertised it when we passed it as a catastrophic health benefit program, a benefit program for seniors. But for a large number of seniors, due to the way we finance this with a surtax on their income tax, this is a tax bill that we passed, nothing less than that.

May I tell my friend from Arizona who points out that that the Harkin-Levin amendment will indeed eliminate that surtax and that it would override the philosophy which was behind the Catastrophic Health Care Program, it indeed does override the philosophy because it was the wrong philosophy.

But what we did in the Catastrophic Health Care Program was to radically depart from what we had ever done before. The radical departure here is not this amendment. This amendment restores us to a general approach, to a benefits program where society benefits.

We say in many cases the beneficiary should pay part of the cost and society should pay any subsidy where a subsidy is required. What is unique about the Catastrophic Health Care Program is that we ask one group, we singled out one group, and said part of that group is going to pay to subsidize another part of that group. That was the departure. That was what was unique, and I think my friend from Arizona even agrees that we have to repeal that surtax.

So it was that surtax which was the departure from the general principle, and it is that surtax which I believe a majority of Members of this body want to get rid of.

By the way, I also want to commend my friend from Arizona for the work he has been doing in this area to try to restore some semblance of fairness. We disagree on the preferable method, and there may be many methods which are less than preferable. But, nonetheless, we do agree there was an unfair surtax imposed upon huge numbers of senior citizens to fund this program.

So first and foremost, our amendment gets rid of this surtax. Second, the amendment preserves most of the benefits of the Catastrophic Health Care Program. Those are important benefits. We should preserve those benefits. We put a limit finally in on out-of-pocket payments which might be owing for medical bills. We put finally a limit on what would have to be paid by individuals for long-term hospital stays.

We put safeguards in here against spousal impoverishment, prescription drug benefit, and others. We should not lose those benefits. Those are critically important to our seniors. They will keep some of our seniors, if we preserve them, from a life of poverty; so we should not throw out those benefits. They are important.

Then the dilemma comes, if we are not going to keep the surtax, which we should not do, and we want to keep the benefits, which we should do, how are we going to pay for these benefits? The answer is provided for in this amendment. We are going to substitute for an unfair surtax a very fair extension of the 33 percent tax rate, the marginal tax rate on families over $208,000 of income, that now actually pay a lower marginal tax rate than do some families with less income.

In other words, Madam President, if a family of four now earns one-half of a million dollars, they are paying a lower marginal tax rate than a family of four that has $80,000 in income. That is not fair. That is the bubble that we have talked about, where the marginal tax rate actually drops for a family of four, for instance, with income above $208,000. We cannot justify that in this society.

So what this amendment does is extends that marginal tax rate that now exists for families below $208,000 to families with income above $208,000. Frankly, I would like to do that out of a sense of fairness even in the absence of trying to pay for these benefits. We should have done that a long time ago; that is fundamental fairness.

Now we have an opportunity to do two things: One, to reduce taxes for 14 million seniors, who are going to be paying this surtax, unless we repeal it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the chair. If my friend will yield 3 additional minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. Certainly.

Mr. LEVIN. What we are able to do is basically accomplish two goals. No. 1, we will get rid of an unfair surtax. It has to go. Seniors want it to go, and I think people who understand this tax system and our benefit system and our philosophy of government should want it to go. We have singled out seniors. We have never singled out any group like this to pay this kind of surtax. We should get rid of this surtax, but we ought to keep the benefits.

We ought to do a third thing, finally get rid of this disparity in our tax system where the marginal income of families earning huge amounts of money, the tax on that income, actually drops, rather than keeps the same as for families earning less than $208,000.

It is an intolerable situation that we have in our Tax Code. It is unthinkable to me that families with huge amounts of income, our wealthiest 600,000 taxpayers, are paying a lower marginal tax rate than middle-income taxpayers. We ought to end that unfairness. We do that in this amendment. We repeal, we correct, we change, we finally, in my book, end the unfairness of the Tax Code which has created this unique situation; and we use those revenues to pay for the benefits in an important program.

Let us accomplish these goals, let us keep the benefits—to the extent we possibly can—that are important to seniors. Let us correct an inequity in the Tax Code which has our wealthiest 600,000 taxpayers, 1 percent of our taxpayers at the upper end, paying a lower marginal tax rate than middle-income taxpayers. We can do all that with the money and repeal this surtax.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Madam President. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ROCKEFELLER].

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank my distinguished colleague, and I hasten to point out that really there are no words to express my respect for Senator LEVIN and Senator HARKIN. That is so often said, and people say now you oppose the amendment, which I do. But between the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Iowa, I do not know where you can find a stronger determination to help people with human problems, people in human crises. I really want to lay that predicate down with deep feeling.

I am also very sympathetic to his effort, because he is trying to respond, and he does not want catastrophic to be repealed altogether, because he wants people to get the benefit, and he is benefit-oriented, people-oriented, which is what this Senator is trying to emphasize throughout this debate. However, I cannot bring myself to understand how this amendment would be—if we were to prevail, how it would ever get past the White House. I regret to say that, but on the other hand, I have to deal with that reality.

Second, as the Senator from Michigan knows very well, there has not been a single time in committee or on the floor where raising the top rate to 33 percent has been raised that I have not been in support of it. I think it is a shame that the wealthy are paying the same amount of income tax, for example, as schoolteachers. It is a shame; it is a disgrace to our country.

The reason that I have to oppose this is because of the enormity of the needs beyond what we are considering here today in health care, that we have to face up to and to which we are going to have to apply money in the future. Again, I know the Pepper Commission states the task before us both in terms of the uninsured and long-term care to 37 million Americans who have no health insurance whatsoever. A quarter of them—in fact more than a quarter of them—are children, and they are not paid for. Eighty percent of the folks who are uninsured are working people, full-time; and over 60 percent of the working uninsured earn less than $10,000 a year. They cannot afford it. So we have to have a change in public policy, in which we provide health insurance for every single American, as Ewe Reinhardt says, we cannot consider ourselves a civilized nation without doing that, and we have to.

Now, let me just give you an example in human terms of what I am talking about. Greg Nugent, from Phoenix, AZ, testified before the Pepper Commission. His son was diagnosed with a brain tumor at the age of 3. We all have children. We try to understand what that means.

The Nugent family could not afford to purchase insurance. Initially, they did not qualify under the State Medicaid Program, because their combined income was too high, both having to work, so they could not qualify. So Mrs. Nugent quit her job, cutting the family income in half, so that, hopefully, she felt maybe they would be able to qualify for the State system. Well, in the meantime, of course, she has no steady income, and the State eventually determined that they were qualified. Then when Mrs. Nugent returned to work, suddenly the family income of $6,000 exceeded the State's limit of $4,000. So, once again, she was without insurance, while trying to do the right thing. This is happening all over this country.

When we come, from the Pepper Commission or from whatever source, to financing the uninsured in this country, if there are going to be more revenues then involved—and certainly it is going to happen—we are going to have to go right at that bubble. I want it to be there, particularly when this bill cannot pass the White House.

The question of long-term care, 9 million Americans require help day in and day out with acts of daily living, by which I mean eating, bathing, dressing, or if there is medical instrumentation involved; they require help with meal preparation, medicine management.

Sixty percent of the long-term care population are elderly. Most people think that all of them are elderly. Forty percent of them are not elderly. They are kids. People in their twenties, thirties, and forties are not eligible.

We have 2.6 million Americans who are severely disabled, old and young; almost 2 million Americans who are chronically disabled, old and young. There is no long-term care that can help them.

Private insurance you say. What does private insurance do for long-term care in this country? The total is less than 1 percent. People do not have it. People have to have it. It is part of what we are going to have to face up to one way or another in this Congress and as a nation. It is coming.

Strikes that take place in this country now are usually because of disputes over health benefits and well they should be because corporations are beginning to back off because the cost of health care is going up. We have to find a way out of all of this.

And worse than that the problem of long-term care is expected to worsen in the future because people are getting older faster, and we know that. They are getting older faster. The elderly population is doubling. We are going to have 64 million in the year 2030, and what is even more depressing, and yet at the same time exhilarating as instrumentation medical technology picks up, we are able to allow people to live longer. And that may keep increasing and indeed will. In fact, half of the cost of health care to the average American in this country takes place in the last 3 months of that American's life. It is an extraordinary fact.

Again I want to talk about individuals and then I will conclude my remarks.

Before the Pepper Commission we had Jim and Rebecca Schienle from Los Angeles, CA. The Schienles, in fact, have been caring for his mother in their home and then placing her in a nursing home, which they did not want to do. There was the devastation to them physically, mentally, in terms of their guilt, in terms of what the mother had done for them. It is a tragic psychological trauma for a family, but they had no choice. They could not afford to keep her at home. Long-term care does not pay for that, unless of course you spend yourself and impoverish yourself so you qualify for Medicaid. That is always an out. So they live with this horrible sense of guilt because long-term care is not there for them. We are going to have to supply it.

The Russells, Deborah and Scott Russell from Grand Rapids, MI; the Russells are parents of 7-year-old twins, Daniel and Margaret. Daniel was born with life-threatening problems to his airway. He cannot breathe. The kid is 7 years old and he has had 30 operations. He must be monitored 24 hours a day. His care averages $200,000 a year. He is currently covered by his father's insurance policy but the extent of that is just about to run out.

Long-term care has to address problems like that in America, and it is not.

The final example is Marilyn Rubin from West Hartford, CT. Her husband Bill has multiple sclerosis. How old is Bill? He is 42. He is a young man. He does not qualify for anything under Medicare until he gets to be 65. That is 23 years from now. There is no help that she can get. The doctor has suggested that they place him in a nursing home because his condition is deteriorating, but they cannot do that because nursing homes will not take him, because there is no way that they could pay the nursing homes.

I just make these points because I want to reemphasize that the health agenda for America is enormous. Again if we are having this kind of conflagration about catastrophic care and maybe it will end up to $357 million; who knows at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I ask my friend for an additional 1 minute.

Mr. McCAIN. Madam President, I yield 1 additional minute to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The point is, we have an enormous health agenda ahead of us in this country which we, in this body, and Congress are going to have to address. We are going to need that higher income, that I desperately want to see, which is in the name of equity and fairness which is what America is going to be all about.

We are going to need that and others to address these kinds of problems we have not even touched to this point.

So sadly, Madam President, I have to oppose it but I do so frankly on strong principle grounds of the agenda that lies before us to which we will have to morally face up to as a nation.

I thank the Senator from Arizona, and I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Who yields time to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. McCAIN. How much time is remaining on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises that the Senator from Oklahoma was first on his feet and sought recognition. I do not know if the Senator is a proponent or opponent of the bill. The Senator who was the opponent of the bill has 14 minutes remaining. The Senator who was the proponent of the bill has 9½ minutes remaining.

Mr. McCAIN. Madam President, I recognize the Senator from Washington for 3 minutes, as previously requested by the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from the State of Washington may proceed.

Mr. GORTON. Madam President, to simply put this amendment back on track it proposes to relieve certain higher income elderly persons of a tax to pay for a prescription drug benefit, retains the benefit and transfers the duty to pay for that benefit to certain other higher income individuals. I oppose the amendment.

I must begin my remarks by saying that in one narrow respect I agree with the remarks of the Senator from Michigan, who is on the other side of this debate. I, too, think it wrong that we should have a top income tax rate of 33 percent on upper middle income individuals and have that rate dropped to 28 percent on even higher incomes. I would be happy to entertain a proposal which reduced the rate to 28 percent on those upper middle income recipients and transfer the 33-percent rate higher up the income scale as long as it was on a revenue neutral basis. It would provide for a more fair and for a more just income tax system.

But when I hear this amendment is proposing to use a simple increase to 33 percent for upper income individuals to pay for this prescription drug benefit, I am reminded of something which has taken place mostly on the other side of the political aisle from the very beginning of this session of Congress.

I have seen this proposed increase in income taxes used in speeches made on the floor of this Senate, mostly on the other side of the aisle, since January, for increased subsidized housing, for education in the lower grades, for more Pell grants and subsidies for university education, for science and science education, for deficit reduction, for aid to Poland, for infrastructure improvements in the United States, for health insurance for the poor, for child care, or to pay for capital gains or individual retirement account tax breaks.

It is an all-purpose tax increase. Whatever it is we are debating at a given time—as recently as yesterday, drugs—this income tax increase is going to be used for. I would hate to pass this amendment and deprive my colleagues on the other side of the aisle of an all-purpose tax increase for whatever the subject of the day happens to be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used all of his time.

Mr. GORTON. I think my colleague from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Madam President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, I rise in opposition to this amendment.

Let me first say that most amendments that we have before us today, at least in this Senator's opinion, are marked improvements over present law. Unfortunately, the amendment that we have before us, the amendment of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Michigan is not an improvement over current law. So I certainly hope it will not be adopted.

Most of the amendments—the amendment of my colleagues, Senator McCAIN, Senator ROTH, and others have significant improvement over current law. They repeal the surtax.

The amendment before us now repeals the surtax on senior citizens and replaces it, basically, with a surtax on other individuals. I heard the statement, "Well, it is only a 5-percent increase, whereas the surtax on senior citizens is 25 percent. So isn't this more equitable?"

Actually, this is not a 5-percent surtax on wealthier individuals. It is an 18-percent surtax, if I compute it correctly. You are increasing the tax rates from 28 to 33 percent. That is a 5-percent increase of rates over 28 percent, and that would be an 18-percent increase in taxes. And so it is not 5 percent, it is an 18-percent increase on wealthier Americans.

But it does not really get to the root of the problem. It does not solve the problem. Senior citizens are upset about the Catastrophic Care Act that passed last year because it mandated a benefit on them that three-fourths of them already had. They did not ask for it. They did not want it. They certainly did not want to be taxed for benefits that they did not request nor did they desire.

My colleagues, with this amendment, just want to send it back to the Finance Committee and say, "Keep all the benefits that you can." You would keep all the duplication that already exists under current law. I think that would be a serious mistake.

We need to make significant reforms. We are going to have good opportunities to do so today. I am excited about the opportunities. I think my colleague from Minnesota has an interesting proposal. I do not plan to support it because I think there is a better one out there. I think Senator ROTH has a good proposal. We could do what the House has done. My friend and colleague from Arizona, Senator McCAIN—and I am happy to be a cosponsor of his amendment—I think has a very significant reform.

I have heard the proponents say, "Well, the surcharge on senior citizens is wrong and it needs to be repealed."

Let us repeal it. Let us repeal it really. Let us repeal it with Senator McCAIN's proposal or Senator ROTH's proposal and not just try and increase taxes on other American citizens.

A major problem with the Catastrophic Act that passed last year is the massive tax increase, but it is also a massive expansion of programs that a lot of people did not ask for, nor did they want.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask that I may be yielded 4 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President I have been around here long enough to know that some things that come out here on the floor are pretty ludicrous. I have to say that this is a ludicrous situation. I do not mean to suggest the amendment of the Senator from Arizona is ludicrous, but it is ludicrous that we have on the laws of our country a provision providing that people who make over $209,000 a year get their taxes cut. Nowhere in the world does that happen unless you happen to be in some place where it is a kingdom or empire somewhere where only the poor pay taxes and the rich do not.

How can anybody conceivably stand up and say it is right to reduce the taxes of those who make over $209,000 a year to 28 percent when a couple making between $70,000 and $209,000 are paying 33 percent? Something has gone wrong.

What we are talking about here in this amendment is being able to preserve the benefits of the people who are now being protected under the Medicare law. What we are trying to do is to save those benefits. And we do it by saying to the 600,000 people who are the richest, "You should pay the same as those who are making between $70,000 and $209,000."

What we are saying is, 600,000 people whose incomes are over that amount should be willing to accept not an unfair burden, just the same rate that everybody else pays if they make over $70,000 a year. What we are doing is we are going to deprive 14 million people of skilled nursing, we are going to deprive them of prescription drugs, we are going to require them to pay the full limit of out-of-pocket expenditures for doctors' bills because we are not willing to ask that segment of America that is the wealthiest in America to pay just the same rate—not a higher rate, just the same rate—as those who make substantially less per year than they do.

I think that this is just as logical an amendment as I have ever heard brought to this floor. My guess is, it will not pass because too many colleagues are going to be worried about those few people in this country who make lots of money and contribute to their campaign. That is what the whole issue is about. Are we going to protect those rich people who give us $1,000 or $2,000, as the case may be?

If you want to be fair, if you want to be decent, if you want to be equitable, if you want to be just, then you have to vote for the Harkin-Levin amendment, of which I am proud to be a cosponsor. It is right. That way you will be preserving the benefits for the 14 million senior citizens; not just for the 14 million senior citizens, for all the senior citizens of this country, you will be preserving their benefits. You will not be cutting back on those benefits as the McCain amendment does, and you will be doing it in a far and equitable way. I hope that the Harkin-Levin amendment passes. I am concerned that it will not. But it is the right thing to do. It is the decent thing to do.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. MACK. I yield myself three minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, with all due respect to my colleagues from Iowa and Michigan, I do not believe that this is a good amendment. The reason I say that is because it keeps in place a program that was ill-conceived.

It keeps in place a program which the seniors of my State are telling me they did not want, they do not want to pay for, they do not need. In fact, what they are telling me is roughly 90 percent of the seniors in this country have already gone out and purchased some form of protection against catastrophic illness. This is the way they say it. They say the top 10 percent of the retirees in this Nation have sufficient income to provide protection against catastrophic illness. The next 70 percent purchase Medigap insurance. The next 10 percent have no coverage. The lowest 10 percent were covered by Medicaid, leaving 10 percent of the people without coverage.

I believe that the Senator from West Virginia is correct. We have some major problems ahead of us with respect to health care. If we make the determination to use this source of revenue for the purpose of keeping in place a program that was ill-conceived, a program that the seniors in this country do not want, that means that we have taken those limited resources away from other programs that the Senators might be interested in.

So again I think it would be a mistake to approve this amendment; a mistake to keep in place a program that the seniors of this Nation do not want, that they believe that we should get rid of, and that we ought to start addressing the question about long-term health care.

That is what I have heard over and over again in the town meetings in my State. Their concern is what happens to them at the age of 80, 85, 90, 95. Again, the Senator from West Virginia is correct. The number of people above the age of 85 in the State of Florida is going to triple between now and the year 2000, some roughly 55,000 people over the age of 85 to somewhere around 150,000. The concern of the senior citizens is what are we going to do about long-term health care?

I say again, with all due respect, I think the amendment is the wrong one. It would keep a program in place that we do not need, seniors do not want, and I think it would be wrong to pass the amendment.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, might I inquire how much time we have?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 5 minutes and 51 seconds.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wonder if my friend from Iowa will yield 2 minutes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan may proceed for 2 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, our friend from Washington said we are going to be raising taxes on some folks and cutting taxes on other folks. He equated seniors who are paying this surtax with the people who are now protected by that bubble. Let me give my colleagues the idea about the income.

Seniors paying surtax are now in the gross income level of $20,000 to $25,000 and above. Those are the folks who are paying the surtax. To suggest that those are rich seniors, or to ask "why help rich seniors out by eliminating this surtax," is absolutely wrong. These are not rich seniors. These are seniors making $20,000 a couple and up.

Most of these are lower-middle and middle-income seniors who are paying this surtax.

The 600,000 people who would pay a larger tax under this amendment are 600,000 people in the upper 1 percent of our communities who earn above $208,000 for a family of four. That is the upper 1 percent income-wise in this country.

So the tax increase here is really tax fairness, because all we want them to do is pay the same marginal rate as middle-income people. So there will be a tax increase for 600,000 folks earning over $200,000 for a family of four and there will be a tax cut for 14 million seniors under this amendment, including seniors who have incomes of $20,000 and up.

Second, my dear friend from West Virginia said let us use the bubble for something else. There are a number of ways I would like to use this bubble. The Senator is sincere when he says he would like to get rid of this bubble, out of fairness. I know him. I know he is sincere. But we have not been able to put together a constituency to get rid of this unfairness and use it for another purpose. There are a number of good purposes, but we have never been able to find the votes.

Now we have a good use—for senior health care. This is a real constituency that we believe can help us have tax fairness agreed to.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, how much time do I have?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator controls 4 minutes 59 seconds.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I will add one note about this amendment that I think is relevant. In 1987 Senator DOLE proposed a resolution not to raise the tax rates. On May 6, 1987—that was the date—that vote had only 10 votes opposing it.

Basically, what we are doing here is raising the tax rates. We know it. Whether that should be or should not be done, I think this body has spoken on that issue.

As I mentioned before, we should probably not view an issue of this magnitude, whether taxes should be raised or not, on a motion to commit on this particular bill—with all due respect and affection for the sponsors of the amendment.

Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa has 3 minutes and 50 seconds.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, first of all, I want to commend the Senator from Arizona for all of the hard work that he has done on this issue and so many issues that pertain to the elderly, the disabled in our country. I particularly want to congratulate him for standing fast, holding firm, and being dogged, and bringing this body to the position we are today in addressing this inequity.

Had it not been for his diligence and his standing firm, I daresay we might not be debating this today.

I also want to again commend my dear friend, and I mean that most sincerely, from West Virginia, who is a very caring and compassionate individual. I know he cares very deeply about the issues of justice for our elderly and our low-income people in this country.

It just goes to show that people of goodwill and good reason can differ on the approaches we might take to solve a problem.

But, Mr. President, I say, yes, we voted not to raise tax rates, but that was across the board. What we are talking about here today is equity. We are talking about simple justice.

The elderly in our country today are paying a higher tax rate than anybody else. Over 40 percent marginal rates are being paid by the elderly of this country. Yet we have 600,000 of the highest income taxpayers paying less than a couple making $60,000 or $70,000 a year. It is just not fair. All we are asking for is equity, fairness. People say this is raising taxes. It is not.

These taxes are being paid but they are being paid by the elderly. All we are saying is shift it. This is a tax shift. We are going to lower the tax for 14 million Americans and shift it to those 600,000 who can really afford it.

I believe this amendment is a fair deal and a square deal for the elderly of this country who need the catastrophic health. The bubble cannot solve all the long-term health care problems. Let us raise the cap, let us raise the $48,000 cap that now exists paying into Social Security. That will take care of all the problems the Senator from West Virginia outlined which are problems we need to solve. The bubble will not handle that. Let us raise the cap to do that. Let us use the bubble to help senior citizens of our country. Let us make tax equity the basis for reducing the surtax on the elderly and giving the elderly the catastrophic health care that they so sorely need in our society today.

Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time has been yielded back.

The question is on the motion to commit S. 1726 with instructions.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second?

There is obviously a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

So the motion to commit S. 1726 with instructions was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next order is for the recognition of Senators DURENBERGER and MITCHELL to call up an amendment on which there is a 1-hour time limitation. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes of my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I will try to be brief to describe this amendment. I have to begin with a short definition of catastrophic, which is what it is all about. Catastrophic basically is freedom from fear that one illness will wipe out everything that you have worked a lifetime to earn. That is the way my parents look at it, and that is the way 32 million Americans look at a catastrophe.

What are the two largest catastrophic expenses that are visited on elderly Americans? If it is illness, it is hospital care and doctor care. You cannot go to a hospital without a doctor. You cannot say you have provided freedom from fear for the elderly in this country unless you eliminate not only the fear of the cost of hospitalization but the fear of the concomitant doctor and other medical expenses.

This amendment preserves the original catastrophic bill proposed by the catastrophic commission, by the Secretary, by the President of the United States, and by those of us who began this process 2 years ago.

It provides that every elderly and disabled person in America eligible for Medicare, when they buy Medicare, will risk being out of pocket only 1 day's hospital costs, currently $560 going to $590 next year. After that all hospital bills are paid. This amendment also provides that after $1,780 out-of-pocket expenses for the doctor and medical expenses related either to hospitalization or doctor's medical expenses of any kind—after $1,780 out of pocket—all doctor bills are paid. There is nothing to compare with that on the floor of the Senate today.

The Riegle bill, which comes next, is $3,390, twice as much as this. All others are zero.

They dump the elderly of America and the disabled people of America on the Medigap where they are averaging somewhere between $900 and $1,400 a year for this kind of coverage.

Why do my colleagues drop part B? Simply because it costs more than anything else in the catastrophic package. It costs more than the drug package. It costs more than the skilled nursing package. It costs more than the part A hospital package. It costs $8.3 billion over the 5-year period to provide catastrophic protection for elderly Americans. Why does it cost $8.3 billion? Because that is the cost to the elderly of this country for their doctor and hospital bills—for just 5.5 percent of the elderly, and for their doctor and hospital bills in a 5-year period.

Hospital cost growths are going up 5.5 percent; doctor costs are going up—over the last 10 years, 15 percent a year. That is the catastrophe waiting to happen to elderly Americans.

So don't anybody go home from here today and say you did not have the chance to protect your elderly constituency from $8.3 billion in hospital and doctor and medical bills.

For those of you who are going to vote to repeal, go home and see if you can defend abandoning skilled nursing home care, home health care, hospice, respite care, and mammograms. I wish my wife had had a mammogram before she died. For the first time in the history of this country we are putting a preventive wellness benefit into the Medicare Program for eligible elderly women in this country. Go home you repealers and tell the elderly women of America you repealed that provision.

We are putting in a part B opt out for those who have duplicate coverage. That takes care of 75 percent of the organizations on the coalition list. We finance it with a reduced flat premium. We reduce the flat premium in the current bill by 46 percent by 1993. Those of you who are worried about the regressivity in the McCain amendment and any of these other amendments where everybody pays the same, rich, poor, whatever, take a look at the premium in the Durenberger amendment. We reduce the current premium in the catastrophic bill by 46 percent in 1993.

The supplemental premium—the people who complained about paying 28 percent of their taxable income and up to $1,050 a person are right. They had a right to complain about that much. We have reduced that one by 400 percent. I heard those people. We reduced that premium. I now have a maximum rate of only 10 percent on the tax side, a maximum payment of $200 next year, $250 in 1993, and no deficit is created.

Mr. President, just to give you an idea, and I think I have passed out to all of my colleagues a list of the impact of the supplemental premium on people, but if you look way out to 1993, 5 years from now, for the people in the $20,000-to-$25,000-a-year category, this core catastrophic premium is only going to cost $12, $12 on top of $9 of the flat rate premium. If you get all the way up to $40,000 to $45,000 a year in taxable income, that is not total, just taxable income, it is only $116 a year, not $1,050, not $800—only $116. Even at the maximum, it is only $250.

Mr. President, I suggest we can have catastrophic. We can have all the benefits that the elderly in this country need for the next 5 years. We can have it at a maximum 5 years from now for $7.18 a month for 60 percent of the people in this country, and a maximum of $27 a month for the richest person in America.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I am pleased that my colleagues in the Senate care enough about catastrophic care to make the effort to salvage it rather than eliminate a program that is so very important to millions of senior citizens throughout the country. The alternative approaches offer a variety of choices, so there is clear interest in the Senate to fix the catastrophic care program we adopted last year.

While we have all received complaints about how the catastrophic care program is financed, we have also received letters and comments in support of retaining the important protections included in this program. The Durenberger-Mitchell approach retains the core benefits already in place and ensures that those benefits will be adequately funded.

This proposal retains the protection against catastrophic hospital costs, keeping coverage for the entire year. It retains the expanded benefits for home health care, including home IV and immunosuppressives drug therapy, hospice care, and respite care that allows more senior citizens to remain at home, rather than forcing them into nursing homes or hospitals simply because Medicare or Medicaid will only reimburse institutionalized care. We will have more options under this proposal.

This compromise also retains Medicare reimbursement for mammography screening which will help detect cancer while it is still very treatable. Clearly women over age 65 are at a higher risk for breast cancer, and clearly many of these women cannot afford to pay the full cost for this lifesaving screening.

While a spouse can be male or female, the majority of people who will benefit from the Medicaid "spousal impoverishment" protection, are women. This compromise proposal keeps this very important provision to protect spouses against dire poverty when one spouse requires nursing home care. No one should be forced into poverty simply because a spouse requires nursing home care. And while this provision does not require that Medicare reimburse for routine nursing home care, it expands Medicaid coverage for nursing home care without forcing a spouse onto the welfare rolls.

The Durenberger-Mitchell compromise proposal also provides protection against excessive out-of-pocket physician expenses. Medicare beneficiaries know all too well how much their out-of-pocket expenses have increased in recent years. For the first time, they can be protected by a cap on the amount of out-of-pocket expenses for doctor bills. This is a very important provision that other proposals do not include. Doctor bills are now increasing by 15 percent a year.

And this compromise also protects those currently using the expanded posthospital skilled nursing benefit. Individuals now utilizing this expansion will be allowed to continue their skilled nursing care for the additional days covered under current law. These individuals will not be thrown into the street or forced into a nonskilled facility that could not provide the necessary care under this proposal.

Finally, this proposal dramatically reduces the cost. I do not believe that any private policy in the world could offer so much for so little. Under this proposal, the maximum cost to beneficiaries is $200 per year, not the $800 under current law. And only those filing joint returns with incomes exceeding $45,000 will pay the maximum. And this maximum is expected to increase by only $50 by 1993, 5 years after the effective date. Unlike other proposals, this financing provision protects beneficiaries against dramatic annual increases.

I believe this is a reasonable price to pay for catastrophic health care. No private policy could provide the same benefits for anything close to $200 per year. The average cost for these same benefits in the private market exceeds $1,000. This is a bargain.

But I understand that some people still may not wish to participate in this catastrophic health care plan, and this proposal offers those people the option not to participate. Anyone who does not wish to participate in part B, including catastrophic care, would be allowed to withdraw from the program under this proposal.

I urge the adoption of the Durenberger-Mitchell compromise. Thank you.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I would be glad to yield to the chairman of the Finance Committee, who has spent an incredible amount of time trying to resolve the problems that we are facing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How much time is yielded?

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BENTSEN. Let me congratulate the Senator from Minnesota for the excellent work he has done on this program. As I look at this program, I cannot help but think it is hard to compromise. I remember what Mo Udall said on that. He said the lion and the lamb can lie down together, but the lamb is not going to get much sleep.

I think this is one of those compromises that will let us sleep well tonight. The reason I think it will let us sleep well is because it preserves the basic core benefits of catastrophic as proposed by President Reagan. While voluntary and tied to part B of Medicare, it retains a lot of important benefits.

For example, extended hospital benefits, no more than one deductible per year—those are important benefits—protection against the costs associated with long hospital stays, protection against the high cost of drugs, and that includes the intervenous drugs administered in the home, and the immunosuppressive drugs administered by people who have undergone or begun transplants—hospice care, a limit on out-of-pocket costs for doctor bills, provides against coinsurance liability of more than $1,600 per year, extended health benefits, respite care benefits.

This amendment will help the elderly and the disabled stay home with relatives or friends instead of having to go into a nursing home—Medicaid benefits, especially spousal impoverishment protection, and that is high on the list of what the elderly want. Some of these things are going to be financed by general revenues. Millions of elderly and disabled people are going to use these kinds of benefits.

What will the cost eventually be? The total for this package of benefits is just under $20 billion for 5 years. How are we going to pay for that one? It will be by a dramatic reduction of that supplementary premium.

First of all, all of those beneficiaries below the poverty line would not be paying anything. Then you would have a base premium of some $4 per month. That would increase to $7.18 in 1993.

Second, the supplemental premium would be reduced to $200 for 2 years and $250 after that. Now, those kinds of costs slash the rate by two-thirds and the maximum supplemental premium by 75 percent.

One of the things that has concerned me in this entire debate is the fact that we have had a very difficult time getting the administration to show any kind of leadership. These are tough choices, and this is a controversial program; we understand that. But there is a time, when standing up for the elderly of this country, that you must make those kinds of tough choices.

I must say, Secretary Sullivan has been a great help in this and has taken a courageous stand. Let me read from his letter of October 5:

> It is critical that we preserve a catastrophic program that offers financial protection to the millions of Americans who do not have that protection.

I am aware that Senator DURENBERGER has a compromise that incorporates our mutual priorities. The same day, that afternoon, Mr. Darman writes:

> Indeed the administration is not taking any official position in favor of any one of the competing substantive amendments, as opposed to the others.

Where is the leadership in the administration? Where are they standing up for the elderly citizens of our country? My friends, this is a program that I think will take care of these kinds of concerns. In fact, this is an amendment that will let the lions and the lambs lie down and sleep together and wake up in the morning with respect for each other.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time to Senator ROCKEFELLER.

Mr. McCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I want to thank my friend from Texas, the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, for all of the efforts he has made on this issue. It has been a terribly frustrating period for him, and I know that he has, time after time, attempted to explore every possible option in order to cure this very difficult problem. All of us are extremely grateful for his efforts. Also I think my friend from Minnesota, who also has labored in a herculean fashion, and all other members of the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, I am not going to attempt to rebut point by point the very eloquent statement made by both of the Senators I just mentioned. Let me try to boil it down to the basics.

The only differences between the Durenberger amendment and the existing McCain bill are two: Surtax and the part B, out-of-pocket cap. I am tempted to do what was done on the floor the other day when the capital gains issue was up and someone says, "tax, tax, tax, tax, tax," by saying, "surtax, surtax, surtax."

We forget the object of the anger of the seniors in America today is the surtax. They will not be satisfied and should not be satisfied, until the surtax is eliminated. I applaud the efforts that my friend has made in order to dramatically reduce these premiums, to reduce the surtax, but the fact remains that the surtax remains in place. If the predictions of my friend from Minnesota are correct, that the health care costs will continue to increase at a double-digit inflationary pace, then sooner or later that surtax will increase again, if they are going to pay for the benefits which the Senator from Minnesota continues to contemplate. Part B out-of-pocket cap.

Mr. President, I have done a lot of work with seniors. There are seniors all over this country, organizations and individuals that have corresponded with me. The National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, known by some as the "James Roosevelt Group," wrote me a letter on October 3:

> While we obviously would prefer not to sacrifice benefits, a poll of our membership taken during the last week of August indicated that of the major benefits offered, the limit on the out-of-pocket expenses that medicare beneficiaries pay under part B is one of the least valued.

That is not my poll, Mr. President. This is a poll from the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare. A poll taken in May of 1,000 seniors all across this country found that of all the benefits in the act, the part B, out-of-pocket cap is the least valuable of all the benefits in the act. That is in the opinion of the seniors.

So what does the Durenberger amendment do? It keeps the surtax, which is the object of the anger of the seniors, and it keeps the least valued portion of the entire program.

So, Mr. President, despite the valiant efforts and the good will that has been exhibited in formulating this amendment, frankly, it does not address the concerns of the seniors.

I want to quickly address this flat premium structure issue. I think it is appropriate to mention, although there is difference in 1991, 1992, and 1993 between my premiums and that contemplated in the Durenberger amendment, I remind——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The staff will please take their seats. Assistants to the Sergeant at Arms will please be diligent in carrying out their responsibilities.

The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. I thank the President. In 1991, 1992, and 1993, there are 65-, 80-, and 90-percent cushions in the revenues that will be collected in order that, if it is appropriate to do so, the Secretary of Health and Human Services can reduce the existing premiums.

Mr. President, there are a number of my colleagues who would like to address this issue. I suggest that if we adopt this proposal, we will further enrage this Nation's seniors and keep the surtax, ignoring the overwhelming opinion regarding this issue, and we will be providing for the surtax, the benefit which they rank as the least valuable.

It is, frankly, confusing to me to understand why an amendment, which flies, frankly, in the face of the overwhelming desires of the seniors, would be approved by this body, with all due respect to the supporters of it, including the distinguished majority leader, who also has been heavily involved in this issue for many years.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I would like to yield 3 minutes to the majority leader.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, last year President Reagan signed this legislation into law. It was a bipartisan bill, the result of a bipartisan effort to ensure adequate financial protection from extraordinary medical expenses.

Not all of the benefits have been fully implemented, nor are they uniformly understood by all of the elderly. Yet, we are now faced with imminent repeal, because of forceful protest against the financing provisions and possible duplication of coverage.

These protests have been heard. They will be acted upon today. But there are many whose voices have not been heard. They also deserve our attention and our concern. They constitute the majority of the elderly, those who would benefit most from this program, because they lack adequate private insurance, and they have no money to buy it.

For some, it is fashionable to ask for repeal of the basic benefits. They are reacting to constituents who say they do not want or need catastrophic protection. These constituents do not want to pay what they consider to be an unreasonably high supplemental premium for these benefits. For their sake, I hope and pray that they are correctly assessing their insurance and their medical risks.

But as we rush to make changes in response to objections over the supplemental premiums, we must not lose sight of those who have no other recourse. We must ensure that the most fundamental catastrophic provisions remain for those who need that protection and cannot get it in any way, other than through this program.

This amendment is a good one. It responds, admittedly politically, but with the objective of sound public policy.

It is first fiscally responsible. Fully funding itself over the benefit period it retains the concept albeit in a very modest manner of a supplemental agreement.

Further it keeps the crucial Medicaid improvement that helps provide an absolute safety net for the low-income elderly and disabled.

The amendment is secondly sensible in its benefit structure. It retains benefits needed during a medical catastrophy such as extended hospitalization and places a realistic cap on physician-related expenses. It retains home intravenous therapy used by a medically fragile population.

It is, third, politically responsive, by substantially reducing the supplemental premium and drastically lowering its cap.

Further it also reduces the flat premium that is paid by all the elderly including those with the least amount of income.

And, fourth, it is voluntary, allowing those beneficiaries who believe they already have adequate coverage the opportunity to opt out of this entire benefit package.

I hope my colleagues will vote for this alternative. It responds to the concerns raised in the last few months but it protects those among our elderly who are at highest risk of financial ruin. We need not abandon the advances made under the Catastrophic Act. It represents the first major benefit changes in the Medicare Program since 1965, and it will be a long time before we consider such an expansion again. This amendment is a reasonable and responsible reaction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader has 2½ minutes of leader time.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will use a few seconds, Mr. President.

This is a responsible reaction to a politically difficult and medically complex situation.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

I thank my distinguished colleague from Minnesota for his leadership and effort in this area.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the minority leader.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority leader is recognized for 2 minutes, and he still has 10 minutes remaining under the leader time which is reserved.

Mr. DOLE. I may need 1 minute of that. I thank the Presiding Officer.

Mr. President, this is a very important day in the U.S. Senate. I know there are a lot of people who have different views on what we should do, and some say we should not do anything, we ought to start over, and that sounds easy. Maybe it would be easy, but I doubt it.

The Finance Committee had to face, in my view, about three principles that were the basis of the committee's action.

We planned to have a package of benefits that provided protection against catastrophic costs and was not simply an expansion of benefits.

Second, given the reality of the deficit, any new benefit must be fully self-financed.

And, third, recognition of the serious problems faced by some elderly citizens who are low income and cannot finance their health care needs.

And the original bill met these goals. But there is no doubt about it. It has been called to our attention that we made a mistake. In some cases we clearly went too far.

At the time of the passage of the bill I noted this Senator's particular concern with both the drug provisions and respite care benefits as being too expensive, and I did not sign the conference report.

But since that time, our fears about the cost of some of the benefits have been realized, and the concerns of some of our elderly citizens with regard to financing mechanisms have been heard.

But, Mr. President, even given those two concerns, the answer is not to reject the program.

The amendment that is before you preserves what this Senator believes to be the critical aspects of the program that have been outlined by the Senator from Minnesota.

First, the truly catastrophic benefits; second, the principle of self-financing; and, third, the low-income elderly are provided a package of benefits they can afford.

Frankly, Mr. President, there is very little debate over the worth of most of the benefits agreed to by this body over a year ago. The real issue has been the financing mechanism.

I, for one, continue to believe that the real problem has been the extraordinary amount of misinformation that has been given to the elderly. The reality is that 60 percent of the elderly will pay no supplemental premium and only 5.2 percent of the 40 percent who pay some amount will pay the full premium. But, Mr. President, explaining this reality is impossible and it has done little to lessen the pressure for repeal, not modification but repeal.

But I believe in this case, and I come from the Midwest where we think we have as much common sense as they have in other parts of the country and we have some commitment to principle, that must outweigh the political situation. In my view, the easiest political thing is to repeal it and wait 60 or 90 days and say what happened to the poor elderly, why has not Congress acted?

So I am in support of the efforts of the Senator from Minnesota. It does preserve a little bit of the supplemental premium, not very much. The cap is not $800. It is $200.

I was in my State fair in Hutchinson, KS, a few weeks ago, and I know the people of my State. One couple in particular came by and I knew they were in a class where they could pay $200, $500, $800, but they did not like it. They wanted to raise the basic premium so everybody would pay, so that those who had the ability to pay could pay less.

I must say, as we look down the road to long-term health care and what we are going to do for senior citizens, and the American people are living longer and longer, thank goodness, if we cannot hang on to a little bit of self-financing I am not certain how we are ever going to put it together, because some of these programs are going to be very costly to finance, particularly long-term care.

I think we have to be realistic and we have to be honest and certainly we have some differences of opinion that are very strong on this floor. I do not question anyone's motives. We all represent senior citizens in our State. Some of us are in that category.

So, I do not think it is in our interest, I am talking about our interest, our State's interest, the interests of the people we represent to reject the concept of self-financing now.

I think the Durenberger proposal reflects good health policy and good fiscal policy. It protects those we should care the most about, and the people we ought to care the most about are the sickest of our elderly, in many cases people who cannot afford it. I say to those who can afford who do not want to pay anything, we cannot do it anymore. We are approaching a $3 trillion budget, $180 billion in interest on the debt. We are worried about your children and your grandchildren, and we finally said we have to have just a little bit to cover some of the costs.

Let me just repeat what the coverage is. It is not unimportant. You take it away and then we will see what happens. Hospital coverage part B out-of-pocket limits, hospice care, home health care, respite care, the so-called Mitchell drugs, catastrophic, drug, mammography, and Medicaid benefits, and there are others.

So I would say to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, I have been in politics for some time, and I know a good political vote when I see it, but this is not a time in my view that we ought to try to figure out the best political vote. Sure we take a little heat, but I will bet in 5 months, 6 months, 7 months, those same people in many cases who thought repeal was the answer are going to be pounding on our door and saying what did you do it for, why did you not stand up in the U.S. Senate, why did you cave in to those who were writing and those who were putting on the pressure?

If we do, it is not without precedent. But I think it will not be one of the better days in the U.S. Senate.

So I am strongly in support of the measure of the Senator from Minnesota, the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL], and I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, with all due respect to our colleagues who are putting forth this amendment, it is not the way to go. In all candor, I heard these same individuals urge adoption of the original legislation and we did adopt it on the grounds that it was financially sound.

Frankly, what is happening with this amendment is a perfect example of what is wrong with health care policy in general and catastrophic in particular. I have heard proposal after proposal that was supposed to be the answer and was supposed to be financially sound.

But the fact is, Mr. President, we have only soft data and we do not know what coverage these senior citizens have. It is wrong to rush things through on a piecemeal basis. And that is what has gotten us into this difficulty.

Right now, as we are talking about adding to the health programs through this amendment, tomorrow or the next day on reconciliation we will have the responsibility for cutting back billions from our health care. The fact is that this country is spending 12 percent of GNP for health care, twice as much as England, and it just is not adequate. So I think the important fact to keep in mind is that we need to step back and look where we are going.

Frankly, one of the problems is that we have only soft figures as to what these various programs cost. Just let me point out how soft these figures are. The original catastrophic insurance program was said to cost $30 billion by the Congressional Budget Office. Now they say it will cost $48 billion, almost a 50-percent increase.

CBO said drugs would cost something like $6 billion over a 5-year period. Now they estimate it will be $12 billion. They said that SNF would cost $400 million the first year, but today they say it will cost $4.2 billion.

I think the problem is that we have adequate information: first, on the cost; and, second, on the duplication of benefits.

As my distinguished colleague from Arizona has said, the seniors are angry. They are angry not only because of the surtax, but they are angry because of the duplication of benefits. They are angry because the Catastrophic Program does not give them the kind of help they want. The key concern is long-term care.

As our distinguished Senator from Arizona pointed out, what we are doing is just cutting back on the surtax, but we are not eliminating it. I could not agree more strongly with him that it is the surtax that has particularly angered the American senior citizen.

So what are we talking about? Well, we are going to cut it back to maybe $200 per person, $400 for a couple. But let me say that is like being a little bit pregnant. They are still going to be angry if we do not eliminate the surtax.

Second, we have no facts about the duplication of benefits. Something like half of the senior citizens who would be covered by catastrophic insurance already have programs providing them with this coverage at little or no cost. This includes the military retirees; it includes Federal retirees; it includes State retirees; it includes retirees in the private sector; and it includes union members.

So until we have accurate information as to what these millions of people have in coverage, should we here today rush and adopt an amendment that was only perfected a few hours ago? In all due respect to the authors, I think it was changed twice within the last 24 or 48 hours. So no one really knows what exactly is in this program. Nobody knows exactly what it is going to cost.

Let me just point out, Mr. President, that this amendment is not going to solve the problem. It is not going to make the seniors happy. It is only going to prolong the agony.

I want to emphasize that the Roth-Danforth amendment, which will come up later, will be the only opportunity to vote for repeal and accomplish repeal by keeping it out of conference. Roth-Danforth repeals the surtax. It repeals the Medicare catastrophic care benefits. But I want to emphasize that the Medicaid provisions such as spousal improverishment will be maintained.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes of my time to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. BRADLEY is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, no amendment that we are going to consider this afternoon that has a chance of adoption, deals as thoroughly as this amendment does with catastrophic health costs and long-term care. This amendment covers hospital costs and physicians' costs. It also covers home health care, expanding it from 21 to 38 days, and it provides respite care for a lot of families in this country who need a break from the constant care that a chronically ill elderly relative demands.

The other amendments that we are considering today either do not cover physician costs, thereby, opening up a hole for senior citizen to fall in by having physicians' costs bankrupt that senior citizen, or the amendments do not acknowledge or identify or cover long-term care.

This is the only amendment that comprehensively addresses the catastrophic health care problem, which is a hospital problem and a physician problem. It is the only amendment that also addresses, although in a small way, long-term care by increasing home health care and by putting into effect a respite care program.

Mr. President, we are able to do this while at the same time we are reducing the surtax from $800 to $200; and at the same time we are reducing the tax rate from ultimately 28 percent to 10 percent.

Mr. President, you will not find on the floor today a better deal to cover catastrophic health care costs or long-term costs than the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. President, as I have heard people debate this issue and encountered people in town meetings, everybody comes up and says "Repeal this program. Repeal this program."

It reminds me a little bit of a few years ago when we enacted withholding on interest and dividends. And we were inundated by hundreds and thousands of letters, and we repealed interest and dividend withholding. There is only one difference this time, Mr. President; that is, if we repeal this bill, people will die and/or go bankrupt. This is not some small decision we are making today when we vote for repeal.

The fact of the matter is there are a million people in this country with out-of-pocket costs every year of more than $2,000. So if you vote for repeal, what are you telling that senior citizen who is very sick and who needs treatment? The senior citizen says, "Do not give me the treatment because I can't afford it," and he dies, or he says, "Give me the treatment," and he goes bankrupt. That is the choice that the Senate will provide for many people in this country who are eligible for this program if it is repealed.

Mr. President, frankly, I preferred a more modest reduction in the existing program. About 5.6 percent of the people, that is all, were paying the top $800. It would not be too much for us to cut it a little bit. But the demand of the body required that we reduce it even more.

Senator DOLE talked about what happens if we do repeal the program, and senior citizens find out about it. And next year they will say, "Why did you do this?" If we manage to salvage this program, next April, when they pay their taxes, and they find it is only $100 that is owed, they will thank us for saving this program, and this amendment now before us is the best way to save it.

Mr. President, it was just last year that the vast majority of the Members of Congress were congratulating themselves for fixing one of the three big problem areas in our health care system. We all know that the three big gaps are catastrophic health care costs for the elderly, long-term care for the elderly, and the lack of protection for the 37 million Americans who do not have any health insurance.

The Catastrophic Act really did make great strides in two of these areas. Because of the legislation, the elderly no longer have to worry about acute care catastrophic costs. The bill also made some modest steps in providing long-term care coverage for the elderly with chronic conditions.

There are many in the Congress who question the importance of the benefits that we enacted in the catastrophic bill. Many here believe that we should repeal the entire program. I believe that such an action would be devastating to the millions of older Americans who will benefit greatly by this legislation.

I urge my colleagues to show restraint in efforts to undermine the very important benefits that we enacted last year. We have all been the targets of intense pressure to undermine catastrophic. These efforts have been based in part on misguided information about catastrophic and inaccurate perceptions of what Medicare provided prior to enactment of the program.

Under previous law, Medicare came nowhere close to covering all the elderly's acute care costs. After 59 days of paid hospital care, Medicare patients had to make increasingly costly hospital payments—rising from $130 per day for days 61 through 90, to $260 per day for days 91 through 150, to the full cost of care for each day beyond 150 days in the hospital. On top of this, there is a 20-percent copayment for all physician services covered by Medicare. For the elderly who have severe medical problems, the financial costs can be devastating.

And the problems financing long-term care are even larger than financing lengthy acute care illnesses. Medicaid only pays for nursing homes after the assets of the elderly person are depleted. And we have almost no home and community care system for the elderly.

We have all heard from our constituents about their concerns with the supplemental premium. I share some of these concerns. I agree that steps must be made to address the concerns of our constituents. But gutting the important benefits in this legislation is not in the best interests of the vast majority of older Americans.

Mr. President, the amendment now before us tries to continue as many of the important benefits as is fiscally practicable, given the realities facing us; and the remaining programs are financed in about as fair a way as possible.

I would be remiss, Mr. President, if I did not point out that the proposal would retain two of the catastrophic care bill's long-term care benefits: home care and respite care. I am particularly pleased that these provisions have been included, because I worked long and hard last year to get these benefits for the elderly.

Before catastrophic, Medicare guidelines allowed most patients to receive home care on a daily basis for only 2 to 3 weeks. Now they can receive it for up to 5½ weeks. It is estimated that about 200,000 elderly each year will receive additional home care through this expansion.

Most people don't even know what respite care is, but I'd like to take a moment to explain it to the Members of this body. Respite care is the provision of a modest amount of relief to family caregivers who are spending their lives caring for their chronically ill family members.

Picture this scene. An 80-year-old man who has serious limitations in his activities—whether it be inability to walk or even toilet himself. His wife is the only reason why this person has not already entered a nursing home. The catastrophic respite care benefit provides this family with support of 80 hours a year to help the caregiver in the home if the family also has high health care costs.

This is a very important program. Except for people in nursing homes, we are talking about some of the sickest older Americans—and those with high health care costs.

In summary, Mr. President, the amendment before us tries to keep as much as possible of the benefits of the program intact. It pays for the program through a lower basic premium and a very modest supplemental premium. And it continues the valuable home health expansions included in the catastrophic bill. I urge adoption of the amendment, for the sake of the Nation's senior citizens.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's 4 minutes have expired.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. HATCH is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, Senator DURENBERGER's proposal retains the supplemental premium in order to provide limited additional benefits. I oppose retaining the supplemental premium for many reasons.

The supplemental premium is counter productive. It says to seniors all around the country that if you save money for your future, we, in Congress, are going to tax that savings and force you to pay more for some benefits than others. If a senior was prudent, this proposal would penalize them for saving and investing for their retirement. And, few will actually receive any benefits under this plan. That needs to be said.

The supplemental premium is not fair. An employee earning $30,000 does not purchase the same specific health insurance benefit at a different price than an employee working for the same employer earning $50,000. Well, if we retain the surtax that is what we are doing. That is, requiring some seniors to pay more for the same benefits than other seniors. We need to vote against any supplemental premiums. And that is the defect of the Durenberger approach.

And, do not forget, the seniors are mandated to buy it. They do not have a choice. We are not allowing them to shop for other types of benefits at lower prices, rather we are forcing the payment for this new program.

Since 1965, we have promised all seniors, regardless of income, that they would have a medical insurance program to help pay for their medical expenses after age 65.

But, if we are going to start means-testing Medicare, let us give seniors and pre-seniors some notice. Let us do it with an open debate. Let us do it fairly, if we do it at all.

I oppose the supplemental premium. I hope Senators will vote against this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 seconds in response.

The fact is that the statement made by the Senator from Utah that everybody is going to get saddled with a surtax is not necessarily true. There is a supplemental premium or surtax in this bill. There is also an optional feature. They do not have to take it. The optional feature is not in the current law. It is in this amendment to change the law. If you do not like the surtax, do not like the catastrophic, do not take part B and you are fine.

Mr. President, I will be glad to yield 2 minutes to our colleague.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DURENBERGER. I will not. I yield to the minority whip.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How much time does the Senator yield?

Mr. DURENBERGER. I yield 2 minutes, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two minutes.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I commend Senator DURENBERGER for his diligent work on the catastrophic coverage issue, and for the proposal he now puts forward. The Senator from Minnesota is not only a thoughtful student of this issue, he is a thoughtful teacher as well.

We are considering two things here today: First, whether to support or repeal or modify catastrophic; and second, what to do about the financing in the event that we keep some version of the program. That is, what to do about the offending supplemental premium.

I think it is pretty clear that we will modify catastrophic today. I hope, as we do this, we do it with an eye toward the future—because what works and what is politically expedient today may prove hideously catastrophic for subsequent generations of elderly.

Mr. President, let me state as clearly as I know how that outright repeal of this legislation would be the most unconscionable decision this body could make. The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act includes certain benefits that senior citizens simply cannot access anywhere else—and they are valuable benefits. There are people already in hospitals who are depending on those benefits. If we think we have problems now, Mr. President, when we get to repeal as the answer, let me tell my colleagues, "we ain't seen nothing yet,"—to paraphrase a former President of the United States.

Certainly the catastrophic bill has flaws—there are benefits that are in the legislation we passed last year which are duplicative. That's something we overlooked. We should correct it. Certainly it is not right to require retirees who have adequate employer-based coverage to pay a mandatory surtax for benefits they already have. Remember, Mr. President, that the Senate passed a voluntary catastrophic bill. We should restore the voluntary nature of this program, and I have supported MALCOLM WALLOP, my colleague from Wyoming, in his efforts to do that.

But when older Americans discover the benefits lost under repeal—and they most certainly will be well-informed on that score in no time—and when they discover that the whole United States has been swung around by its tail by 5 percent of their most fortunate cogenarions who don't want to pay for these benefits, my guess is we'll see a firestorm that outshines this one by many megawatts.

Mr. President, we're not hearing from the seniors who find these benefits valuable and who are quite willing—thank you—to pay for them with a small amount of money. I hope we will hear from them.

If there seems to be confusion at the White House about this issue, or in the Senate or in the U.S. House or in the committees—or anywhere else—well, is that surprising? Why should the White House not be confused at the reaction to catastrophic? To a program ushered through Congress in good faith, with the express purpose of protecting the financial independence of senior citizens from the threat of ruinous health care expenses?

We are not confused, Mr. President. We are terrorized. We are terrorized by a small group of people in the United States who want to sit it out while we go through some of the toughest, most wrenching social decisions this country has ever faced. They are going to sit it out while we deal—somehow—with the projected drawdown of the social security trust funds, and with the escalating costs of health care which right now consume 12 percent of our gross national product.

Mr. President, there will be consequences to repeal just as there were consequences of enactment. Seniors will look for those benefits one day, and they will look at us as the ones who took them away. If we repeal catastrophic, we will do grave harm. For instance, what will become of those seniors who, upon learning of the new Medicare catastrophic benefits, dropped their Medicare supplement policies as Congress intended they should? Remember when we passed catastrophic, we justified the cost to seniors by telling them they could safely drop their expensive private Medigap policies. Many have. Not the majority, but many have. What about those who did who are now uninsurable? Medicare catastrophic would be pulled out from under them while their private insurance companies won't take them back. If we repeal catastrophic, what becomes of these people?

In the frenzy over the surtax premium, Mr. President, we have lost sight of the fact that the catastrophic act was designed to help people. Over 11 million people—many of them our poorest seniors—will need and use the benefits offered under this program. There are long-term care benefits in there that will make or break families and lives. There are acute care protections that will make the difference between perpetual welfare dependency and financial security. If we repeal this program, we will be turning our backs. And I believe that is the cruel and wrong thing to do.

People are objecting that the catastrophic law seems to violate the principles of social welfare benefit financing. That may have some truth to it. I also happen to believe that that is the path this fine old country must begin to travel down if she is to survive.

Le me just also make the observation for the benefit of my colleagues that the present catastrophic financing arrangement is not the wholesale violation of social insurance principles as some might suggest. Seniors are still getting a tremendous subsidy under the Medicare law. If you take into account Medicare parts A and B and catastrophic, seniors who have contributed the average HI payroll taxes and who pay the average supplemental premium are receiving a Medicare subsidy of $2,300 per year. The subsidy for those who contribute and pay the maximum amounts is less certainly, but not insignificant. Given the demographic time-bomb, we will have to do much more income-relating of social welfare programs or our children will be paying nearly 35 percent of payroll to support those 65 and over.

For some curious reason, no one here is talking about the future. I cannot remember a time in recent history when we have failed to do that. What, exactly, are we going to leave behind with our social welfare policies? When we have the Social Security trust funds in dramatic drawdown, and the health insurance trust funds exhausted, what will become of the standard of living we profess to want our children to be able to enjoy? Let's sober up.

I support Senator DURENBERGER's proposal because it preserves the catastrophic benefits that are most critical to the financial security of senior citizens. I also applaud his decision to retain the financing principles of the original law. This is an important precedent. As the population of elderly people grows, the volume of health care benefits they consume will increase dramatically. So will the social cost of those benefits. Some are advocating broad-based financing. But today's low birth rates mean that the future tax base will remain relatively constant, so that taxes would have to rise dramatically to keep pace with the cost of benefits. In contrast, requiring that portion of population which will use the benefits to pay part of the costs will assure that the financing base grows steadily along with the demand for services. It is the only way to make this program work over the long term. I don't say this out of any lack of generosity toward seniors, Mr. President, and I am not "grey bashing." To the contrary. We made a commitment to the elderly when we enacted the Catastrophic Coverage Act that they would never again have to decide between bankruptcy and a protracted illness. I believe that if we are earnest in that commitment, we must structure the program so that it is sustainable over the long term. These are the demographic imperatives and economic realities which do and must govern our policies from here on out. We indeed owe that to those who follow us.

Senator DURENBERGER's approach retains the supplemental premium, but reduces it to a level that few could honestly complain about. And it reduces the flat premium so that the program will be less of a burden on the lower-income elderly. All this it does while preserving the important hospitalization, physician, and what I'll call "para-long-term care" benefits: home health, respite, and hospice care.

Mr. President, I have never seen anything like this issue. Are we looking at a new social experiment? Yes, it is a new social experiment: It is called paying for what you get especially if you have the wherewithall to do it. If we are going to bow to the pressure of these more fortunate seniors as they raise hob from coast to coast, what will then be the fiscal future for their children and their grandchildren? Who will pay the bill? The debt limit we will vote on this month is $3.1 trillion—quite a bill isn't it? Ready to mortgage our heirs to the hilt? Will they stand still for it? Ask them that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. First let me say to my friend from Minnesota, he said there is an option in his proposal to not take the coverage. Everyone should know it is not an option to not take only the doctors coverage which is the only add-on here over the McCain bill. It is an option to opt out of all of Medicare part B. Everyone ought to know that. That option has been around. Seniors have rejected that regularly.

Mr. President, let me suggest for this Senator it is very difficult to argue against Senator BOB DOLE and others who are here. I happen to feel in this case they are wrong.

First, we should not be misled. This is not an argument between repeal and the Durenberger amendment. There is pending a McCain amendment. It, too, is totally self-financing. The differences are simple but profound.

To explain the first difference I call to my colleagues' attention senior citizens in the United States under the Durenberger amendment are going to have to fill out, as part of their tax return, a supplemental Medicare premium Internal Revenue form.

Normally you fill out supplemental forms because you want a tax rebate or a tax refund. But in this case, seniors will have to fill this out so they can tax you. And if you are a Government pensioner you will fill out this form plus another one. For the privilege of paying more taxes, you will fill out a Government pension adjustment to supplement the basic form. That will indicate how much you owe the Government.

I am not trying to make a political issue. But frankly, we should understand that we are taking a giant step. What is the giant step? To enter into that new arena of surtaxes on senior citizens for a little tiny piece of health care.

Many seniors are not so dumb. They are wondering, what is next? You tell them this is a $200 maximum. But they are saying, what is next?

I submit to my colleagues we ought to be on the floor reforming health care. We ought to be on the floor eliminating tort liability against the medical practitioners of this country, across the land, and beginning to cut health care costs. We are doing none of that.

Why are we doing this? From one surtax to another? Because we want to include all of the wonderful things that the Durenberger amendment covers. But I remind every Senator, they are all covered in the McCain amendment except one thing: Doctors' bills; so-called catastrophic doctors' bills after many dollars have already been spent by seniors.

The marvelous protections that the Senator from New Jersey said we should cover are covered in the McCain bill. We have many options, not just repeal. Repeal is an option which we will vote on later, or McCain, or a number of other proposals. This is not vote for this or we get repeal. We have plenty of options.

This adds catastrophic doctor coverage, for which we will pay a surtax of up to $200. And I might add, in conclusion, I do not really think we ought to kid ourselves. This coverage is nothing great for seniors, in my opinion. It only covers approved Medicare payments.

There may be many seniors shocked to find that this approved Medicare payment will not cover what many doctors charge for their services. Some doctors charge more than Medicare-approved amounts.

So, Mr. President, I am not against a pay-as-you-go plan. I think we are going to have to end up with some kind of major reform. It may include some kind of supplemental premium someday. But it should not be for this little tiny add-on to the heath care program.

When we are ready to reform the entire thing, let us look at something that is truly in the long-term interest of seniors, in the long-term interest of this country.

We are now paying 12 percent of our gross national product for health care, 2 times Japan, almost 1½ times Canada. And here today we are prompting an inflationary spiral that follows every single time the U.S. Government enters into a new health care program to help people.

Seniors understand. The surtax is a foot in the door.

If it were for something beyond one added item it seems to me it would be deserving of consideration. I do not believe it is.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the Senator from Minnesota.

The Senator from New Mexico says the difference between the Durenberger amendment, which I support, and the McCain amendment, is just one little thing. That is called part B.

Well, part B is where the majority of expenses, medical expenses for senior citizens, are. That is where they are. That is an $8 billion item we are talking about and that is why there is a small supplemental premium of $200. Because that is what seniors need, those doctor services. And that is what the Durenberger amendment gives them.

An elderly person, let us say, has a severe, chronic problem like cancer. Surgery is required, chemotherapy, extensive follow-up visits, rehabilitation. Then the bills start coming in from physicians, from radiologists, anesthesiologists, and all the rest. And, under the Durenberger amendment, they will get paid. Under some of the others, they will not get paid.

And that is the point: Part B is the difference. This is good health policy. This is sound financial policy, and unlike some of the other amendments, including the one that will follow, the Durenberger amendment does provide adequate reserves and a contingency fund which is crucial to a program of this type.

Mr. President, I strongly urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this Durenberger leadership bipartisan amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Utah, followed by 5 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota indicated the seniors can opt out under his program. I think it is duping our seniors to have them believe they can opt out of it, or that this will make the catastrophic program voluntary. It will be voluntary if you close your eyes and ignore the stick over your head. They say seniors may opt out of catastrophic, but if they do, they lose their part B coverage.

Let us face it: In reality, this claim is simply a false political promise to our Nation's senior citizens. Part B benefits are partly subsidized at 75 percent of cost. Part B benefits provide seniors with services they need, like physician visits and outpatient services.

The so-called voluntary approach like this one is misleading. I am just not willing to mislead the seniors with regard to this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY] is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I, too, rise in opposition to the proposal of my colleague from Minnesota. In the first place, it does not repeal the supplemental premium, and if there is any one thing that ought to have come through loud and clear from the grassroots over the last several months, it is that that is the major fault point that the people writing to us against this proposal have made to us. Loudly and clearly it has come home that they do not wish to pay a supplemental premium linked to their basic tax.

As I noted in June on this floor, this is not simply a question of a financial burden of such a surtax, although that is most certainly an important part of it. It is also a question of the size of the supplemental premium relative to those benefits for which it is paying, and the people out there writing to us are not ignorant about whether they are getting a good buy or not.

Finally, it is a question of subsidization of other Medicare beneficiaries that occurs in any financing method which entails a premium graduated by income.

In the second place, the proposal before us retains an expensive benefit which older Medicare beneficiaries have told us that they do not want. The Wirthlin Poll and the Cooper and Secrest Poll have already been quoted here on this floor. I am not going to repeat that.

But, again, the people who have been writing to us know what they want to buy. With the proposal before us we would force them to buy something that they do not want and is low on their priority list of things they want to buy when it comes to health care—namely, a physician benefit.

Furthermore, the proposal under consideration makes it even more difficult to get that physician benefit from the original program by raising the cap a beneficiary must meet before he or she becomes eligible for the benefit. It raises it from $1,370 to $1,780.

If the physician benefit would work as did the physician benefit under the currently enacted program, it is my understanding that a beneficiary would experience fairly substantial outlays before becoming eligible for the benefit. That, again, is something that the people perceive very clearly and that they do not like about it.

I refer not simply to the fact that the deductible has been raised to $1,780, but also to the fact that many of the expenses incurred by the beneficiaries will not count toward that cap. The Senator from New Mexico only pointed out one of those.

As I understand it, the part B deductible of $75 would count as would the 20-percent coinsurance for all Medicare approved part B changes. As I understand it further, the following expenses do not count: the hospital deductible—that is around $560 in 1989—the basic part B premium of $31.90; any physician charges not approved by Medicare; the basic flat new premium of $4 per month; and any supplemental premium amounts incurred by taxpaying beneficiaries.

The point, finally, Mr. President, is that Medicare beneficiaries could incur a fairly heavy burden of health care costs before even coming close to the new higher deductible of $1,780. We have had an opportunity to sell this program because every one of us out there at the grassroots level over the last several months have been asked about this.

We have had an opportunity to explain it, and we have not been able to convince people that the program, and this benefit now under consideration, are worth it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time? Time runs equally against both sides.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, the people who are arguing for this amendment are singing the old siren song that we have heard in this country for 50 years. They say this is sound health policy, this is sound fiscal policy, and what is wrong with all these people who do not like it? What is wrong with them? They say the seniors are not as smart as we are in Congress. They are confused; we are giving them something and they ought to love us as they have always loved us for giving them something.

The plain truth is we are not giving them something. We have forced them into a program that does not make sense, that lowers the living standards of the very people we claim to be helping.

The issue on this amendment is very simple, and I do not believe the American people are going to be deceived. The issue on this amendment is: Are you for the surtax or are you against the surtax? If you are for the surtax, then you will vote for this amendment. If you are against the surtax, you will vote against this amendment.

So, Mr. President, basically, the song we are hearing says you brought this fellow in, he has a cancer, and they say, look, let us compromise. Let us take half of it out and let us leave half of it in.

The U.S. Senate made a terrible mistake. We passed a law that clearly does not work. The problem is not selling it in 60 seconds. We have had a year to sell it, and we have seen newsletter after newsletter, political speech after political speech, promise after promise, and the plain truth is the American people understand that this program stinks. They understand that is it a bad buy and they do not want it. They want to be out from under it.

I urge my colleagues, let us not let the same old status quo arguments that collectivism is always wonderful, and if the people do not love it, it is because they are stupid.

Let us defeat this amendment and either adopt a legitimate reform, which is the McCain amendment, or repeal the bill outright. But a vote for this amendment is a vote for the status quo. It is a vote for the surtax. It is a vote to keep in place a bill that the American people understand, and because they do understand it, they want to be rid of it.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HEINZ addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, could I inquire as to how much time remains on both sides?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona has 3 minutes 21 seconds. The Senator from West Virginia has 4 minutes.

Mr. HEINZ addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I ask for 2 minutes from the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I believe it is customary for the side with the most time remaining to proceed. I ask that we proceed in that fashion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time? There is still some time remaining on the bill.

Mr. DURENBERGER addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania be yielded 2 minutes to speak on the bill.

Mr. McCAIN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Time is running against both sides.

Mr. DURENBERGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I ask my colleague from West Virginia, who I understand controls the time in opposition to the bill, to yield me an additional 5 minutes on this amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The Senator from West Virginia will be glad to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 5 minutes on the bill.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I support this amendment. I find it difficult to accept the logic of my friend from Texas. He does not recognize the importance of having a form of social insurance as the undergirding of this whole process of looking after the health care needs of our elderly people. My only reservation about supporting this program is that it really does not meet the challenges in the area of outpatient prescription drugs.

In listening to this debate, Mr. President, to those who say that what we really need is a comprehensive review, I have been interested in that for a number of years. We should not hold our senior citizens who are in real danger of absolute bankruptcy from hospital care or from doctors' care hostage until we in this Senate are going to come to grips with that particular issue, No. 1.

Second, we should not make the best the enemy of the better. This amendment now before us will make for a better system and will provide some real difference in the quality of life for the seniors of this country and deserves the support of this body.

Mr. McCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota still has time remaining under his 5 minutes.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am going to reserve the remainder of my time at this point.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I suppose everybody has their reasons for wanting to vote for or against, as I think most do, the Durenberger amendment, and maybe many people are inclined to vote for it because the Senator from Minnesota retains a small portion of the supplemental premium. I might say, in all candor, that had the benefit that was being retained been a drug benefit instead of the part B benefit, I would probably be supporting the Senator from Minnesota even if his amendment retained the supplemental, or a small piece of the supplemental premium.

Let me tell you why I think the drug benefit is a better deal for Medicare beneficiaries than the part B cap. First, it is a better deal because it will help a much larger percentage of Medicare beneficiaries with catastrophic health care costs. Under the current law, some 27 percent of persons would benefit from coverage of prescription drugs costs compared with the 7 percent who would be protected from costly physician services. Under the Durenberger amendment, only 5 percent benefit from the part B cap. The second, and perhaps most important, reason why the prescription drug program is a better deal, is because all Medicare beneficiaries stand to benefit from the drug utilization review screen that prevents such problems as harmful if not life-threatening drug interactions. This screen, in essence, is a drug safety program that will help every beneficiary, regardless of whether they exceed the deductible limit.

Let me hasten to add, Mr. President, that there is one class of people who stand to lose the most if the part B cap is eliminated. These are ESRD patients, end stage renal disease patients, of which percent have part B costs exceeding the current catastrophic cap. This is not an argument against helping these patients, who I believe we should help directly and in a better say. I think we could help them better if we tailored a benefit specifically for them.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Minnesota will yield a couple of minutes.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I would love to, but I cannot at this stage.

Mr. DURENBERGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I should like to yield 1 minute to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. I have been one who has very carefully followed this debate and been very torn between the McCain approach and the Durenberger approach. The bottom line is, as the Senator from Texas enunciated, what do the people want. We have just completed a survey of my constituents. Nearly 5,000 responded. They want the supplemental premium dramatically reduced. Durenberger does that.

The No. 1 concern on the benefit side in my State was capping the out-of-pocket physician expenses—No. 1 concern. The only proposal left before us that does that is the Durenberger approach. So I urge my colleagues to respond to the will of the people on this question and to support the Durenberger approach.

Mr. President, I yield back the time.

Mr. DURENBERGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. DASCHLE. I rise as well to support the Durenberger amendment. There is the question of the supplemental premium as well as whether or not we include coverage of doctor bills.

There have been a number of comments made about the limited value of the doctor coverage, but every Senator, before they vote, ought to understand that up to 30 percent of the elderly or 10 million seniors in this country have no Medigap coverage at all, and there are 300,000 senior citizens who have out-of-pocket expenses that exceed $2,000. They are the people about whom we are talking. They are the ones who are going to benefit by having that benefit included in the catastrophic program.

The second issue is one of surtax. Do we include it or do we not? This is the only opportunity we have to make the payment a progressive one. No one should be misled. The fact is, if we do not have a supplemental premium, some kind of surtax, we have a regressive system that will pay for the program. A flat fee is a regressive fee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. DURENBERGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I direct a question to my colleague from West Virginia. I had an inquiry from the Senator from Arkansas who would like to speak to this bill. I only have several minutes remaining myself.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I would be delighted to yield 5 minutes off of my time on the bill as a whole to the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I will not take 5 minutes. I want to start by asking the Senator from Minnesota what the budget impact of this proposal is.

Mr. DURENBERGER. In fiscal year 1990, I believe the budget impact is substantially less than the budget impact of any of the other alternatives here, $1.5 billion, which will have to be picked up out of the part A trust fund. That is a smaller amount than any of the other alternatives are going to have. After that, all of the benefits in my amendment are financed out of the financing mechanisms.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I am going to vote for this proposal. It certainly is not perfect, but the fact that we have 10 or 12 proposals before us shows that there is a lack of consensus in this body on how to address this problem.

I also know that the problems we are trying to address is acute. Betty and I try to take care of a 92-year-old woman in a nursing home in Arkansas, and I know something about the medical bills senior citizens face. I know what the drug bills are. Happily, she had saved all of her life and has enough to take care of most of her needs for a long while. But I am absolutely staggered every month as those medical bills—I am talking about the prescription drug bills—come in for this 92-year-old woman. I promise you she could not care less about this debate. She does not know about it. She would not understand it. There are a lot of people just like her.

The point I want to make is that turning our backs totally on senior citizens and saying that we are not going to address one of the most pressing needs in the Nation would be the height of irresponsibility.

I have voted against all the proposals so far. I thought some of them had pretty good features, but on balance I could not support them. I do not want to go home and tell my seniors the Senate did nothing about catastrophic coverage. When I was home in August, that is all I heard. I had one inquiry on the flag, and 8,000 on catastrophic illness. So I understand the volatility of this issue. I understand the politics of it. Believe me, I understand the politics of it.

There are 360,000 people in my State over 65 years of age. But, I can tell you one thing. I do not have the slightest hesitancy in going home and talking sense to them about this issue.

I will not have the slightest hesitancy in telling them why I voted for this proposal. It is a modest one. It does not cost very much. But it provides fairly significant benefits in areas where benefits are needed so badly.

So I will plead with all who think you are going to vote for a repeal, cleanse your skirts, and go home and say to senior citizens, "I honored your request, I voted to repeal that whole disaster." When you tell them that, you should add, "I voted against any middle ground, I voted against any quarter ground, and I voted against anything that would provide some relief for you for your staggering medical bills.

Some seniors have Medigap. Some of my Federal retirees say they already have adequate coverage. Other people say they are covered. I am pleased they are. Most of them feel fortunate they are covered. But there are millions who have no catastrophic coverage. It is for them I am casting this vote. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. DURENBERGER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I want to begin the conclusion of this by saying to everyone, whether it is the leadership, the followship or confused, this is a very difficult issue. It is a very difficult day for all of us. I am not going to try to correct impressions that have been left here by anyone. I do think it is important on the issue of opt out on the coalition of the Senator from Arizona and so forth. Most of these people have a real legitimate concern. They need to opt out of this because they have duplicate coverage.

So in the debate about whether or not catastrophic is elective, let us not lose sight of the fact that there are a lot of people out there who should not be part of this program, who ought to have the option to get out of it and either bill, the Senator from Arizona or mine, does that for those people.

For those who say we ought to be doing reform on the floor, we ought to be reforming this, that, I can only say I have been doing it ever since I came here.

Whenever the going gets tough, somebody stands up and says, I am for reform but do not do it that way. It is not easy to be in this position. The Senator from New Mexico has experienced that on the side of reforming the budget process system. Everybody around here is an expert on the budget. He tries to stand up, say this is the only way to do it, this is the best way to do it, I am thoughtful about it, and the rest of it, if it does not hit in our State, stand around and say we do not particularly like it. It is difficult to do.

The other day I sent somebody out to find out how many votes there were against repeal. They came back and said we have good news, and bad news. The good news is there were 63 votes against repeal. I say terrific. They said the bad news is they are all in the House.

The reality is, Mr. President, that the remaining choices other than perhaps the Riegle choice are repeal choices. You will have to go back home with either the Roth repeal, repeal the work of the McCain amendment, and say you repeal 8.3 billion dollars' worth of doctor and medical bills, for the 5.5 percent of the elderly who are in most need in this country, and you denied the other 9.5 percent the opportunity to get out of some Medigap Program that is taking advantage of them.

That is the heart of the issue. Yes, the surtax is part of this problem. But the other part that you are going to understand if you do not adopt this amendment, when you get back to New Mexico, back to Arizona, or any of those places Minnesotans go to, is this is the real catastrophe, the doctor bill and the medical bill.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota has 2 minutes and 29 seconds remaining.

Mr. DURENBERGER. If someone dropped in on this debate, they would somehow believe it was a question of repeal of the Durenberger amendment. That is clearly not the case.

We will be able to vote on about two more amendments on repeal. This is whether we want to keep the surtax or not. I do not believe there is anyone in this room that believes seniors of America want to keep a surtax. I know they do not. We all know they do not. Let us vote against it. I appreciate the valiant efforts of my friend from Minnesota, and others who have brought forth I think a good effort but it is not good enough.

I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a series of editorials in support of saving catastrophic be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Los Angeles Times, May 22, 1989]

CLARIFYING A CONTROVERSY

Criticism of the expansion of Medicare benefits that went into effect Jan. 1 rages on. Thousands of senior Americans are besieging both the House and Senate with appeals to amend or set aside the so-called catastrophic coverage and other benefits now being phased into Medicare. But we have reviewed the changes again, and we think it would be a serious mistake to abandon the program.

Most of the controversy focuses on the fact that catastrophic coverage is financed by premiums and tax surcharges paid by the beneficiaries themselves. Because the surcharge will apply to only 40% of the higher-income Medicare recipients, the burden on middle- and upper-income retired persons will increase, but even they will continue to receive in benefits far more than they contribute in taxes and premiums.

A study by the Congressional Budget Office demonstrates that the average Medicare beneficiary, enrolling at this time, actually contributes, in payroll taxes, premiums and supplementary tax surcharges, only 25% of the benefits received.

It is true that the new expansion of Medicare, with its expanded acute-care hospital and prescription drug benefits, has shifted the levels of subsidies. The subsidies for low- and average-wage earners will increase slightly. For higher-income persons, however, the lifetime benefits in excess of taxes and premiums are in effect reduced by $11,400 for men and $15,900 for women, according to the Congressional Budget Office research.

"Nevertheless, for high-income retirees, the value of Medicare exceeds taxes by $1,650 a year and represents a subsidy of approximately 38% of benefits," according to the study. No program of similar quality and benefits is available to any other segment of the population. Medicare, with an overhead of about 2%, contrasts in particular with private Medi-Gap insurance policies that may pay back only 60% of premiums. Still, the surcharge will cost as much as 2% of gross income for a few this year, and close to 3% of income for a few by the year 1993.

These discrepancies reflect the unique funding of the Medicare catastrophic coverage extension. There are two sources of this funding. Everyone, rich and poor, pays a flat $4 monthly premium. Those with federal income tax obligations of $150 or more pay a surcharge. The surcharge is in addition to the basic Medicare premiums. This year, the surcharge will amount to about $78 for a person with gross income of $15,000, $307 at $25,000, up to a maximum of $800 for those with incomes of $40,000 or more.

There are some groups of Medicare beneficiaries with special problems created by the extension of coverage. One of these groups, constituting an estimated 10% of the total, already was receiving similar benefits at no cost under retirement arrangements with their employers. The law requires those employers to maintain equivalent support only for one additional year. Some government retirees feel the offset included in the law is not adequate to protect them from the disproportionate tax surcharges they face. Some fine-tuning of those rules may be appropriate in the future.

There also is controversy over the extent of the surplus that may develop in the new fund in its initial years, and the adequacy of the funding proposed for the prescription drug benefit to be phased in over future years. We agree with President Bush that the government should follow the most cautious route. Any adjustment of the tax surcharge should be postponed until there is a clearer picture of the surplus question. The schedule for the implementing drug benefits should be maintained.

There is, admittedly, a glaring defect in this legislation. It is not well-named. It is not, in fact, catastrophic protection, because the real catastrophe in health care for older Americans is the absence of protection against the high cost of long-term care in a nursing home. Medicare, even with some improvements in this legislation, provides only limited long-term care. In the absence of affordable private insurance for long-term care, the only effective safety net is provided by Medicaid, called Medi-Cal in California, which is provided only for low-income elderly. Clearly, Congress must not stop with the 1989 improvements to Medicare. It must proceed with long-term care protection.

But the older Americans who are angered at being asked to share the cost of the new benefits must remember that there are other health-care priorities, first among them a response to the 37 million Americans who have no health insurance of any kind. Most of them are working or are the dependents of workers. They would doubtless be among the first to object to any scheme to turn to general revenues to reduce the cost of already highly subsidized Medicare coverage.

[From the New York Times, July 6, 1989]

THE MEDICARE FLAP: NO CATASTROPHE

Congress threatens an ill-considered overreaction to angry critics of the new Medicare catastrophic health insurance. In fact, the insurance program requires only minor adjustments.

Catastrophic insurance, which began in January, reimburses Medicare beneficiaries for large hospital, doctor and outpatient drug bills. To pay for the program, Congress raised monthly fees for Medicare Part B, the program that now covers a portion of physician and outpatient costs. In order to subsidize the insurance for poorer people, Congress also imposed a surtax on elderly taxpayers.

The more affluent, who pay the largest tax, are bitterly opposed. Why, they ask, should they be the only taxpayers to subsidize low-income elderly? They also point out, correctly, that the surtax is now expected to generate a surplus that hadn't been anticipated.

Congress has three options: to end the surtax; to make the program voluntary; to cut premiums and the surtax to reduce the projected surplus.

End the Surtax? Upper-income families don't need or deserve subsidies for medical insurance. Yet Medicare heavily subsidizes even the wealthiest families. An elderly person with a $40,000 income will pay, on average, for only 67 percent of the Medicare benefits received during his lifetime—even after paying the surtax. Persons will lower income receive substantially higher subsidies. The surtax does not unfairly tax the affluent. It only diminishes their hefty Medicare subsidy. There is no reason to change that policy.

Make It Voluntary? Allowing the healthiest and wealthiest to drop catastrophic insurance would force up rates for the rest. To avoid this dilemma, Senator Lloyd Bentsen ponders offering enrollees the specious choice of forgoing catastrophic insurance by giving up all Medicare Part B coverage. Part B is heavily subsidized; few would opt out. But by linking it to catastrophic in this way, Senator Bentsen would force enrollees to think harder about benefits and costs. That is a sure way to undermine belligerence.

Reduce premiums? The Congressional Budget Office now estimates that over the next five years catastrophic insurance will generate about $2 billion more than the law requires. But five-year projections are notoriously inaccurate, especially for new programs.

There is still room for maneuver. All Congress needs to do is to set Medicare premiums every year rather than every five years, as is done now. With that flexibility, Congress could cut premiums and control surpluses without long-term risk.

Catastrophic insurance was no mistake. What if needs now is yearly tuning, not panicky retreat.

[From the St. Cloud Daily Times, July 28, 1989]

KEEP CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT

Just a year after its passage, the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act is in the shop for possible repairs. The Senate has passed the controversial law to its Finance Committee to discuss revisions.

Critics of the innovative insurance program, strongly supported by the Bush Administration and several members of both political parties, seem to be multiplying, especially since more revenue is being collected than is necessary to fund it. The latest Congressional Budget Office estimate predicts the program will have an $8 billion surplus by the end of 1993.

Others who find the program distasteful say it's unfair to place a surtax on one group of citizens—in this case the elderly. One critic pointed out that public education costs aren't shouldered exclusively by people with children.

Not only is the catastrophic coverage financed only by Medicare beneficiaries, only 41 percent of them are paying the graduated income tax surcharge that supplements the $48 annual payment made by persons enrolled in Medicare Part B. Faultfinders of the law say that means the wealthy, who are less likely to need the insurance program, are financing it for the poor members of their age group.

Still others against the program say it doesn't provide any benefits for long-term care, which they say is the coverage the elderly need the most.

But for all its problems, the law remains one that takes care of a pressing need of all senior citizens, providing for the enormous cost of acute illness, including medications and home care that could follow hospitalization. Financed through the Medicare system, the program reaches out to alleviate one of the greatest fears of the low and middle-class senior citizen, losing everything to pay medical costs of a serious illness.

This is an issue that transcends party lines. Its authors are last year's Democratic vice presidential candidate, Lloyd Bentsen, and Minnesota's Republican Senator Dave Durenberger. Two of its staunchest supporters are Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas and Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine. The law came out of the Reagan administration, but some Republicans, such as Sen. John McCain of Arizona, are its most vehement critics.

The program undoubtedly has bugs. All government programs do. But some of them, including the excess that's being collected, can be squashed with some revisions. Our growing numbers of elderly deserve to be free from worry about paying medical bills for catastrophic illness.

CATASTROPHIC CARE IS ESSENTIAL; SAVE IT

Catastrophic health care has a lot of folks upset.

It's upset senior citizens in Chicago. They besieged the car of U.S. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, whose committee oversees Medicare financing, to jeer him because he supports Medicare's new catastrophic health plan.

It's upset some members of the American Association of Retired Persons, the USA's largest senior-citizen group. They've quit AARP because it endorsed that plan.

It's upset 71-year-old David Kuseloff of Wilmington, Del. He's suing to overturn the plan.

From Florida to Michigan, from Maine to California, seniors are writing and threatening their representatives in Congress. Why are they fighting the biggest expansion in Medicare benefits in 23 years?

You can read across this page why some seniors are angry and want the new plan repealed. They claim the payments made by seniors will be used to balance the budget.

That is wrong. A small percentage of seniors has misled many others. All of the money will be used to pay for more health care for our nation's elderly. And seniors with higher incomes will pay a higher share of the cost.

The plan includes:

All hospital bills over $600 a year.

50% of prescription drug costs over $600 in 1991, 80% after 1993.

17 additional days of home health care.

80 hours a year of help for families with bedridden parents or spouses.

Up to $50 for women's mammograms every two years.

50 additional days of skilled nursing care.

The plan also limits the cost to seniors for physician and outpatient services to $1,370 in 1990; removes the 210-day limit on hospice care, and permits spouses of nursing home residents to keep more of their income and assets.

In all, 85% of the seniors will use these benefits before they die, and 7.6 million of them will benefit from this plan in 1993.

Some seniors object to the high cost—almost $12 billion a year by 1993. The average senior will pay $285 a year.

But that's a bargain compared to the $750 they would have to pay for similar private insurance. And it will eliminate much of the $3 billion a year seniors have been spending for unneeded insurance coverage.

That's why Consumer Reports, AARP and United Seniors Health Cooperative say this is a good deal for 80% of all seniors. But it's the other 20% who are complaining.

As you can see elsewhere on this page, some seniors would have to pay more than others for this coverage. And that's what makes them mad. They say it's not fair for them to subsidize the benefits of others.

Unfortunately, some in Congress are bending. They've come up with a new plan that would make poorer seniors pay more so wealthier seniors could pay less.

That truly is not fair—and a tragic retreat. A retreat on this plan could defeat efforts to provide long-term health care, a more vital and expensive need of the elderly.

Now is no time to discard this protection. That would be a real catastrophe—for everyone.

[From the St. Paul Pioneer and Dispatch, Oct. 5, 1989]

DO NOT ALLOW UPROAR TO BLOW AWAY BENEFITS

Not all the fierce, battering winds of this hurricane season have been charted on the weather maps. One has been whipping through the halls of Congress, threatening to blow away the Medicare Catastrophic Health Care Act.

Passed with pride a scant year ago, the act has generated a storm of protest from the very people it was designed to help—older Americans. Huge numbers of them are enraged that the ones benefiting from the act will be the only ones to pay for it.

They are right that this is a change in social policy. But they are wrong to oppose it.

Until now, the cost of social programs has been spread over all the people. But the drafters of the act, including Sen. Dave Durenberger, R-Minn., correctly and repeatedly make this point: The demographics of an aging America have shifted the ground under what's fair. Look at the huge growth in the percentage of citizens in the "senior" group; look at a program that will help that group almost exclusively. Asking that group to shoulder the expense is not unreasonable.

Some older Americans with limited incomes are furious about the program because they misunderstand how little they must pay for it—$4 per month. Some middle- and upper-income seniors are equally furious because they can afford to buy "medi-gap" insurance; thus, they feel no personal need for the catastrophic coverage and don't want the surtax on their taxable income that helps fund it.

So the gale-force protests are rocking a Congress that did a good, creative, humane thing when it passed the act in 1988. Committees in the House and Senate, trying to salvage a piece of the law, may cut benefits or shift the surtax so that the comfortable pay less and the near-poor pay more. Cut the benefits if they must; but as for shifting the surtax burden, they should stand rock-solid against the storm.

It would be better to have the Catastrophic Health Care Act in some form than not to have it at all. It would be better yet if seniors who can afford medi-gap policies directed their demands for change at the insurance industry. Insurers could surely design new, optional plans with features that avoid duplicating the act's benefits.

Benefits now reeling before a wind. Benefits badly needed to keep medical disasters from blowing away all that seniors own.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 14, 1989]

CATASTROPHIC RETREAT

For want of much else to include in his State of the Union address in 1986, an election year, Ronald Reagan announced that he was ordering his secretary of health and human services to make a study of catastrophic health insurance. A year later he proposed a limited bill. Then as now, the nation's most pressing health care problem was how to provide for the mostly poor seventh of the population that is uninsured. Mr. Reagan's bill didn't speak to that; it applied instead to Medicare beneficiaries, the mostly elderly seventh of the population that is already the nation's most heavily insured. Nor did the proposal even meet the most pressing need of the elderly—help with the cost of long-term care, which Medicare doesn't cover. His bill merely capped what patients can be called upon to pay per year as their share of the services that Medicare does provide.

A Democratic Congress was nonetheless not to be outdone by a Republican president in, of all things, aid to the elderly. An expanded bill was easily passed. The creative work was in the financing. The president himself had decreed for fiscal and distributional reasons that the elderly themselves should pay the cost; he proposed that every Medicare recipient be assessed a flat monthly premium regardless of income or ability to pay. Congress, to cover a greater cost, proposed that this be topped with an income surtax, so that the better-off would pay more.

Just about everyone loved the bill when it was passed, and the talk was mainly of the benefits. They represented the greatest expansion of Medicare since its enactment in the mid-1960s. Then the taxes came into view, the better-off elderly began to squawk—and Congress began to flee from its own creation. Both houses and parties, and the Bush administration, now seem determined to back down.

We don't think they ought to retreat, but if they do, they ought to do it in an orderly way. Ronald Reagan was right; this program should not be financed out of general revenues. There are higher uses for these—reducing the deficit, meeting the health care and other needs of the poor, any number of other purposes—than fattening up the Medicare program. If the catastrophic program is to be retained, the elderly should remain the ones to pay for it, and as much of its progressivity as possible should be preserved. Any benefit cut will be felt more by those with low incomes than by those with high ones; a benefit cut to reduce the taxes of people with higher incomes will thus be doubly regressive. When it passed the bill last year, Congress moved money from rich toward poor. In backing down, it ought to undo as little of that good work as it can.

TO CUT THE COST, SAVE THE CORE OF CATASTROPHIC CARE

(By Dave Durenberger)

WASHINGTON.—Yogi Berra once said that if people don't want to come to the ballgame, there's no way you can stop them. To say the least, America's seniors are not flocking to cheer for the Medicare catastrophic bill; they are staying away in droves. As a result, Congress will soon decide to beat a hasty retreat from an expansion of Medicare benefits signed into law only 14 months ago. The extent and direction of that retreat have profound consequences which have thus far been underestimated.

It comes as a surprise to most people that only about a third of the so-called Medicare Catastrophic Act dealt with genuine medical catastrophes. Another third of its expenditures are for the prescription drug benefit. With its massive administrative overhead and huge potential for expanded claims, this portion has added significantly to the total catastrophic care pricetag.

The final third of the program is the long-term care benefit that Congress created through the skilled nursing facility provisions of the bill. Several states now, and potentially all of them in the near future, can shift Medicaid costs of nursing homes to the federal Medicare program via the catastrophic benefit.

The irony is that the most common argument raised against the act is that it doesn't give seniors enough of what they want for what they are charged. In fact, it puts us on the road to seniors' two top priorities: drug coverage and long-term care. Unfortunately, the fiscally necessary "front loading" of the catastrophic benefit, through which surpluses are built up early to pay for future benefit outlays, has left many seniors in a "pay now, get later" situation.

The perceived mandate to Congress is to reduce the $800-per-year supplemental premium at all costs. There are only three ways to do that: (1) shift the financing burden to other taxpayers; (2) reduce the benefits or (3) suspend the laws of mathematics.

Medicare benefits, of course, are financed through payroll taxes. The average Medicare beneficiary receives about $4,000 worth of health-insurance coverage each year. Of that, about $2,600 is subsidized by taxes on workers' paychecks. The principle that the administration and the House and Senate leadership began with was that new benefits would be paid for by the beneficiaries themselves. The alternative was to exacerbate an already large intergenerational cost shift.

I have proposed a plan that would meet genuine catastrophic situations at a fraction of the current cost. First, Medicare would continue to cover catastrophic expenses under Part A (hospitals) and Part B (doctors). Second, drug coverage would be given for expensive immunosuppressive and home intravenous therapies. Third, we could maintain the protections in current law against so-called "spousal impoverishment." The government could finance such a package with a dramatically reduced supplemental premium that would have a top rate of about $300 per year.

And we need to take an additional step. Once an affordable benefit package has been established, we need to turn a watchful eye toward the private insurance market. The "medigap" policy merchants, through the voices of retired movie actors, have sold seniors coverage they don't need. Catastrophic coverage should bring some private medigap premiums down; if it doesn't, then the government must be in a position to step in to further regulate this portion of the insurance industry.

The Medicare Catastrophic Act will probably end up being an unfortunate case of "what might have been" for America's seniors and the Medicare program. Long-term care and drug benefits that came in under the catastrophic care program were a foundation on which to build future benefits. Instead, it is back to the drawing board to await the deliberations of the Pepper Commission.

But Congress can still salvage two important things in its retreat from catastrophic: first, a core group of benefits that our most vulnerable seniors desperately need, and second, the principle that Medicare expansion comes at a price, and that price should be borne primarily by those who benefit from it. Payroll taxes which are collected progressively should be paid out in new benefits in a way that reflects individuals' ability to pay.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I yield the remainder of my time. How much time do I have?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota has 1 minute and 50 seconds.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, as an original cosponsor of the amendment by my friend and distinguished colleague from Minnesota, Senator DAVE DURENBERGER, I wish to express my strongest support for this plan.

Senator DURENBERGER deserves our thanks and commendation for the yeoman work he has invested developing this amendment. Throughout the development of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act and its subsequent review and redebate, Senator DURENBERGER has demonstrated the highest concern for the best interests of senior citizens, as well as for good and responsible health care policy. The Nation is fortunate, indeed, for his leadership and for his wisdom.

As all of us know, modification of the current law catastrophic program entails some difficult choices. Given the constraints imposed by the budget deficit, all of the options involve actions that most of us would prefer not to take. Nobody wants to cut benefits or raise taxes. Nobody wants to raise the flat premiums which are paid by rich and poor, alike. Nobody wants to increase the deficit. Nevertheless, these are the options we face.

Senator DURENBERGER has found a fair and workable balance. He has devised a plan to substantially reduce premiums and to preserve as many important benefits as possible.

This proposal would preserve the core catastrophic benefits—unlimited hospitalization with only one annual deductible, and 100-percent coverage for physician services after a catastrophic deductible of $1,780.

In addition, Senator DURENBERGER'S amendment would preserve some important new Medicare benefits: Coverage for home-administered intravenous drugs; expanded home health care and hospice care; preventive mammography screening for breast cancer; and a new long-term care benefit—home respite care.

The Durenberger proposal also retains the new Medicaid expansions so crucial to low-income Americans. Coverage for spousal impoverishment would be retained. Medicaid would still buy-in premiums and coinsurance for the poor elderly. And, new coverage for pregnant women and children would be protected.

With this core of benefits, the Durenberger proposal can provide for much-reduced premiums. The monthly premium, which is now $4 and which is scheduled to increase to $10.20 in 1992, would increase only to $7. This will be extremely helpful for low- and moderate-income seniors for whom the monthly Medicare premium poses a significant expense.

Further, under the Durenberger amendment, the supplemental premium—which now reaches a maximum of $800—would be cut to $200; and the rate would be cut from 15 to 10 percent. This adds up to a 65-percent reduction in the supplemental premium.

All in all, this proposal represents good health policy. It retains important catastrophic health insurance protection for seniors. This proposal is financially responsible, as well. It provides for adequate reserves and contingency margins for the Medicare Program and does not increase the Federal deficit.

For these reasons, the Durenberger proposal enjoys bipartisan support. President Bush's Secretary of Health and Human Services, Dr. Sullivan, is on record in favor of this bill. The Senate leadership—Senator MITCHELL and Senator DOLE—stand behind it, as well.

I urge my colleagues to take a careful look at this plan. It is responsible and fair. It offers good health insurance protection. Let's not repeal these benefits in a rush of political anxiety. Let's do the right thing. Vote for the Durenberger amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of Senators DURENBERGER and MITCHELL. The yeas and nays are not ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIEGLE. I yield.

Mr. McCLURE. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. President, when I voted against the catastrophic health insurance bill last year, a newspaper in Lewiston, ID, ran a headline that said, "McClure to Senior Citizens: Drop Dead."

Now, I do not have to explain to any of my Senate colleagues that headlines like that are not something politicians seek out.

I do not think that senior citizens would necessarily want all Members of Congress to drop dead—but they certainly have sent a clear message to us that they are not pleased with the catastrophic health insurance law. They have been telling us in increasingly vocal numbers that they do not like the coverage, they do not need the coverage, they think it is too expensive and, frankly, they want an end to it—now.

I think it is about time we listen to the will of the people we represent.

Mr. President, I do not necessarily doubt the motives of my colleagues who voted in favor of this measure. But I think the entire approach to this law was wrong from the very beginning and I shall take a few mintues to explain why.

First, this law was misnamed from the beginning. It should not be called the "Medicare Catastrophic Care Act." It should be called "Medicare, Part C." The catastrophe that most senior citizens fear the most is not prescription drug costs. It is not extended hospitalization. It is nursing home care.

Second, Congress made a fundamental error is determining that senior citizens suffer more from catastrophic illnesses than does the rest of the population. A bill was drafted which directed enormous amounts of money to one segment of the population, based on age, and totally ignored all other groups.

Is a young working couple whose child develops leukemia any less of a catastrophe than a senior citizen with Alzheimer's disease? I do not think most senior citizens feel that way either.

Mr. President, I am a senior citizen. It is entirely possible that at some point either my wife or I could suffer from a devastating illness that would deplete our savings and make us dependent on someone else for help. But I still do not think I should be afforded special consideration only because I am a senior citizen.

Instead of passing legislation that deals only with the health care needs of the elderly, Congress should have taken a look at the effects of catastrophic illness on every American, young and old. I will be the first to say I think such a proposal should have a very strict means test attached to it, but nevertheless, Congress should have addressed the needs of all citizens faced with drastic illness.

But Congress did not do that. In my view, Congress took an easier route than dealing with the larger issue and directed efforts at senior citizens who were supposed to be eternally grateful for this coverage. What a surprise to some when the outcry started.

Senior citizens are more than disturbed by this issue, Mr. Presdent. They are outraged. They are telling us in no uncertain terms that they want this law repealed, or at the very least, substantially modified. I think we have an obligation to do so.

At the risk of patting myself on the back, Mr. President, I remember saying last year that when senior citizens fully understood what this law contains, there would be an outcry the likes of which Congress has rarely seen. I honestly take no pleasure in saying today that my prediction was correct because I know this issue has been as contentious and controversial as any of my colleagues have ever seen. It has been difficult and painful.

But that does not mean we should not live up to our obligations and represent the people who elected us. After all, that is what we are here for. Senior citizens are telling us, "Hey, you made a mistake. Now undo it."

There is an old saying we use frequently around here. "It it ain't broke, don't fix it."

Mr. President, this one is definitely broke, and we had better fix it.

Mr. RIEGLE. I thank my friend from Idaho.

I hope now he will give careful consideration to what is being offered here.

AMENDMENT NO. 988

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, we have gone through today several options to try to deal with the problems that we are all familiar with with respect to the catastrophic health insurance program that we enacted 2 years ago.

At this stage of the game, there are really three practical alternatives left, the one that is being offered now and which I think is the best possible of the three that remain in terms of meeting the basic health needs of seniors across the country in a fashion that is both financially and fiscally sound and in a way that seniors themselves will find to their liking and that is sensible.

At this stage of the game this option which we are offering stands beside full repeal and what is known as the McCain option which is quite different and I think far inferior, and I do not say that disrespectfully to the sponsor.

What we basically do here is we retain the catastrophic health insurance package that was enacted. We take that package and with very minor modifcation break in into two parts—one part, which will cover the catastrophic costs of hospital care and doctor care, is in the first part. This will be paid for by a basic premium, paid for by each and every citizen in the country that will come in under the reach of the program. And the cost for that premium will be exactly what is presently in the current law.

I have shown that here on this chart. It starts out in fiscal year 1990 at $4.90; in 1991, $7.40; in 1992, $9.20; and in 1993, $10.20. These are figures that are locked into the law today and they will provide protection on those two major catastrophic items.

Some have said that those are not important. Those are not important, I suppose, if you do not have them. But if you get sick today with a major catastrophic illness, the doctor bills can go through the roof. I have seen cases where they have been $10,000, $20,000, $50,000, fully apart from the question of the hospital costs. So it is important that the protection be in place to cover the hospital and the doctors, and that is what the basic premium would provide here for every citizen in the country.

The remaining part of the catastrophic program under the existing law which is paid for by a surtax would be changed fundamentally. We do away with the surtax. In fact, what we do is bundle up the remainder of the protections that are in the catastrophic health insurance program, and we make those available as a free-standing voluntary option to the seniors of this country.

They can take a look at it. If they think it is a good value, if they think it is something they want, then they have the option to say yes, I will take that, and then to pay the monthly fee for those additional protections. If they decide that they do not want it, as clearly some in the country will decide, they are under no obligation to take it. It is not stuffed down their throats and they are quite free to seek that package or another protection package that they might find.

The optional program assuming the people elect to take it, would include several things that are not present in some of the other plans that we have heard about.

With respect to the McCain language, the principal deficiency in my view is that it does not provide drug protection for outpatient drugs for people who have the chronic need for drugs of one kind or another to treat an illness or, in many cases, just to stay alive. And those bills can run up. In countless cases I have seen—in my State, where the drug bills alone can be several hundred dollars a month, it is not uncommon to find seniors with prescription drug bills that exceed $100 a month.

We retain the drug benefit in this optional package. I think it is a very important part of what this alternative offers.

We also maintain the skilled nursing home benefit. That is a very important benefit in the current catastrophic law. There used to be a requirement for a 3-day hospital stay before one could go into skilled nursing home care. We found that to be a bad practice. It kept many people from getting the care they needed. It created a very awkward front-end requirement. We changed that, perfected that in the last law. This amendment maintains that particular protection.

We also retain the home health benefit, the respite care, and the hospice care.

We have asked the Congressional Budget Office to give us an estimate of the cost for our voluntary program that includes those very important benefits. The figures they have given us are a monthly premium cost of $15.40 in fiscal year 1990, then in 1991, when the drug benefit phases in under existing law, it moves up to $30.30 and it stays in the $30 range, $33.60, in 1992; $35.80 in 1993.

Now for these additional protections, this is a sensational bargain. It is a value that most seniors, I think, when they look at it, will decide is something that they will want, but it will be their decision. It will be their decision because they have to make that decision for themselves on a voluntary basis. And it is not connected to any other decision.

Some people will say, "Well, do we really want to get into this optional kind of arrangement?" We now have an option that has been in the law for many, many years in part B. To have that, people have to elect to do it. They have to actually make a choice. And this is simply an additional option that would be an add-on that seniors would have too look at and make their own judgment about.

But I can tell you this: As we have gone out in the private sector to price the value of this package, where you would have normal profit margins and other things built in, we do not find any private sector insurance carrier that cover this particular package for an affordable price.

So I think this is an excellent value. And the CBO estimates, as they look at the selection process, that 65 percent of the seniors would choose to elect this benefit package with this kind of a cost arrangement to it. But, in any case, that would be a decision that they would make. So it solves several problems at once. It eliminates the surtax which has been such a contentious issue. But it does something that the McCain proposal does not do; that is, it provides protection against sky-high doctor bills that can bankrupt somebody, take away a life savings. And it also provides a prescription drug coverage for cases where those costs run very high on an annual basis. It is very important that those particular benefits be retained.

As I say, people have to decide for themselves whether they want to choose that protection or not.

But with the first tier, of hospital and doctor costs, we have laid in place a protection which is essential, I think for every person in this country. We have all been familiar with any number of cases of constituents of ours where doctors bills and hospital bills run in the tens of thousands of dollars.

My 4½ year old daughter just had very serious appendicitis surgery and spent 9 days in Children's Hospital here. The hospital bill alone was $15,000. And the doctor bills, of course, came in on top of that.

But I said to myself, that is what people all across the country are facing today. Seniors are finding, if they are in the hospital for longer than that, and many of them are, that you can have an entire lifetime of earnings and savings wiped out by a single illness. The hospital takes part of it and the doctor bills take the rest.

So we provided absolute protection against the catastrophic impact of those kinds of costs with respect to both hospital and doctor bills that is a universal coverage paid for by this basic, and I think very inexpensive, premium for the protections that it affords. The rest is done all voluntarily. No surtax, but a sensible package.

I will just say one other thing. Many of us have conducted hearings in our home States on the health care needs of our senior citizens. I have done that in Michigan. I have held countless hearings across the State. Last year alone we had about seven hearings in different locations. Several hundred would come to each hearing, testifying and giving their personal examples of what was going on in their situations. They are all found in this hearings record.

What they say over and over again is the kind of protections that they most need are the ones that are in this package. And when the Congress before went through this thing, the financing obviously was not done properly. Frankly, that was a mistake that should never have occurred. A lot of it was on the insistence of people who designed the program and sent it down from the executive branch at that time.

In any event, we radically changed the financing here. But, as to the benefits structure, as to the protections that are provided, these are the protections that experience show us are the most needed. These are the ones that are most debilitating; these are the ones that drain the money out the fastest; and these are the ones that are driving people into the poor house, bankrupting families, creating poverty situations, where the spouse of the person who is sick becomes impoverished as well.

So this is a plan that is solid. It is sensible and it will work. I think the seniors like this plan. I have discussed it with many of them. We are getting a good response from them. It is far superior to the remaining two options that are before us.

I know the Senator from Rhode Island wants to speak, so I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. McCAIN. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I do not have a lot to say about this amendment, but there are two facets of it I would like Members to look at very closely. I believe if they do, they are going to recognize that, while this looks like a sweet deal, it really is not.

First of all, clearly one of the things that our senior citizens are concerned about is paying their doctor bills. Under the current catastrophic legislation, your copayment has to go up to $1,370 before you hit the point where from that point on catastrophic pays all the doctor bills. That is pretty steep because you are paying 20 cents out of every dollar. So that is a pretty high threshold before you get into the program, which is why there are so many seniors saying this is a bad deal. In fact, we have protests all over the country saying, "Look, if I have to pay $1,370 and that is only 20 percent of my doctor bill before I get catastrophic coverage, you are not giving me a lot of protection."

But, Mr. President, the amendment before us says that you do not get the protection in terms of full dollar coverage until you have spent $3,390. The current law says you must pay $1,370 in out-of-pocket copayments before you get the full coverage. But the amendment before us raises that copayment cap to $3,390.

I ask my colleagues, since that is 20 percent of the doctor bill, in a year how much coverage are we really buying here when a senior citizen has to pay $13,580 before they get full dollar coverage for the doctor bills?

I submit one of the reasons this deal looks so sweet is because they have gone through and more than doubled the copayment you have to have before you qualify to get the full benefit. That is my first point.

Mr. RIEGLE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRAMM. I will when I get through, but let me finish my point because I have only a limited time.

The second point is one of the ways this amendment gives all of these nice benefit programs is by saying we are going to make them optional. Then the author of the amendment says: and of course that is going to be cheaper than the private sector.

If there is anybody here who believes that, then I am wasting my words on them because they are not going to believe what I say. There is a trick here. There is a little gimmick.

The gimmick is that 65 percent of the senior citizens have to believe this is a good deal in order for it to pay out.

Mr. President, first of all I submit the sickest senior citizens are going to view this as a good deal. They are not going to be selected at random from the population. And their expenditures are going to be higher.

Second, what happens if only 20 percent of the people opt for it? We are told by the Senator from Michigan that the Government can buy it cheaper than the private sector. The private sector is going to be competing. If Aetna or anybody else can do it cheaper, they will go with them and not Uncle Sam. So what if 20 percent opt for it, and what if they are the sickest 20 percent?

Mr. President, it does not take much to figure out what happens if that is the case. What happens, if that is the case, is that the costs skyrocket, the program starts running heavily in the red, and then what is going to happen?

Either we are going to come back here and say: Look, we said you could choose it, but you obviously are making a mistake. You are picking Prudential; you are picking Aetna. You do not know, but the Government does this stuff better so we have to make you do what is right. We have to make you take it and then we have to make you pay for it, and we are right back with the bill we came here to change.

Or, we start running deep in the red and we say: Look, the problem is we have to go back and get young workers to pay more. So we raise their premiums.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Five minutes has expired.

Mr. GRAMM. I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 2 additional minutes to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I am not an expert on the proposal before us, but there are two points that jump out at us and I ask each Member to look at them very closely before they conclude this is a good deal for my mother and for all senior citizens of America.

First of all, under the current law we have to spend $1,370 to get the full dollar catastrophic coverage for doctor bills. Under this law we have to spend $3,900. In other words, your doctor bills have to be $13,580 before this amendment comes to your aid. I submit there are going to be a lot of senior citizens who are going to be in deep trouble before that happens.

Second, this amendment pays out actuarially only if the distinguished Senator from Michigan is right and the Government can provide this voluntary benefit cheaper than Aetna and Prudential. I submit, Mr. President, we will make history. If that were true, the riots would be in Washington instead of Moscow and Beijing.

I submit that 65 percent will opt for Aetna, or will opt for Prudential. This thing will run billions of dollars into the red and we will be back here forcing senior citizens into this program. We will be back here raising the cost. And we will be right back to where we are today. Or we will make our young workers come in and pay higher and higher taxes.

I urge my colleagues, do not be fooled by another deal that looks good until somebody has to live under it. My mother and your parents and the senior citizens of America are going to have to live under what we do here today. We made a terrible mistake last year. Let us not make another mistake today.

Mr. President, let us reject this amendment. I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I want to make a comment before yielding to the Senator from Rhode Island. The Senator is, of course, a cosponsor of the McCain amendment. He complains about the limit in our doctor bill proposal. There is no limit on the McCain proposal, absolutely no limit at all. The sky is the limit.

The Senator from Texas and I hope he never experiences this, but if his dear old mother or mine gets sick and runs up doctor bills, $20,000, $30,000, $40,000, they get no help in terms of catastrophic doctor bills under the proposal being offered by Mr. McCAIN.

We have a cap and that is a fundamental difference.

I yield 8 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, what does this amendment do? It does away with the supplemental so-called surtax totally. It establishes a core group of benefits for which every Medicare beneficiary would pay the same flat premium. These are the basic benefits.

In addition, it establishes a new voluntary program which includes benefits that are not widely available in the private sector.

I would like to differ with my friend from Texas who said we are competing with Aetna and others. No. This provides a benefit that is not widely available in the private sector. It is paid for by a flat premium.

So, this amendment does not involve the use of general funds. It does not increase taxes like the Levin amendment that was rejected previously. And it does not have a supplemental premium.

Under part I, the standard part of the program, all beneficiaries who elect to have the standard Medicare part B that currently exists, what will they receive? They will receive unlimited hospital coverage with no copayments after paying the first day deductible, which is currently $560.

They will receive unlimited coverage of physician bills after a beneficiary reaches a deductible set at what is necessary to ensure the current flat premium.

Now, the statement was made that that deductible that the individual would have to meet is a high one. That is true. It is true it is $3,390. But this is a catastrophic program. That is what we are talking about.

When they reach the $3,390, then they are covered. That is not true under the alternative presented by the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

Our proposal includes the same part B increase as is in the current catastrophic law. As we see in the chart, it provides under the current law, it is $4.90 for the increase over the currently existing part B premium, and $7.40 in 1991, and so forth. We follow the same schedule. So there is no increase in that basic part B premium.

What else do we have here? It also provides a part II, which is optional. Nobody has to take it. Under that, the individual, if he takes this option, will receive the prescription drugs.

In my State, I met with seniors many, many times, and their principal concern is the high cost of prescription drugs. That is extremely important, I believe. In order to pay for that and a host of other benefits that are in the current catastrophic program, we provide for this optional premium.

In other words, if they take the program, obviously they have to pay the premium. With it, they receive these benefits that I believe are extremely important.

Mr. President, in the excitement of the afternoon and the intensity of the debate, let us not lose sight of a large group of people out there who need these benefits. There is a genuine need for these benefits. I believe the benefits as set forth in the original catastrophic bill were the right ones. I know the argument then came about paying for them, and somehow the Nation suddenly believed that everybody who filed an income tax return, who was over 65, was going to pay $800 additional.

That simply is not true. But, nonetheless, that is the belief out there, so we do not have the supplemental premium. I believe that is probably what brought down the prior amendment, the fact there was a supplemental premium. I believe those who are elderly want these benefits, and, under this program, they have the opportunity to obtain them. I believe this is a good amendment, Mr. President. It is truly what we might call a catastrophic amendment. It deals with those who have the high cost of the doctors bills, as previously mentioned. I want to thank the Chair.

Mr. RIEGLE. We reserve the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes. There are a lot of people who want to speak.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. McCAIN. Let us compare the two programs, $8.62, $7.21 per month in 1991. Under that proposal, the seniors will get the hospital benefit and the part B out-of-pocket cap, period. For $2.30 more, in the same year, under my legislation, seniors will get the hospital benefit, the so-called Mitchell drugs, home health, respite, mammograms, and hospice, all of those for basically the same price, Mr. President. So let us not have any doubt about what is the priority here of the proposed amendment. The priority is obviously a cap on part B out-of-pocket payments.

I would like to read from a letter from the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare. That is known to some as the Jimmy Roosevelt group.

While we would obviously prefer not to sacrifice benefits, a poll of our membership taken during the last week of August indicated that of the major benefits offered, the limit on the out-of-pocket expenses that medicare beneficiaries pay under part B is one of the least valued.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter and list of members be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL COMMITTEE TO PRESERVE SOCIAL SECURITY AND MEDICARE,
Washington, DC, October 3, 1989.

Hon. JOHN McCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Russell Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR McCAIN: The National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare has reviewed your proposal to modify the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act and is pleased to offer our endorsement while making the following observations.

We are especially pleased that your proposal completely eliminates the surtax and finances the benefits through the increases in the flat premium, which are already contained in current law. It is our understanding that your proposal is revenue neutral.

While we would obviously prefer not to sacrifice benefits, a poll of our membership taken during the last week of August indicated that of the major benefits offered, the limit on the out-of-pocket expenses that Medicare beneficiaries pay under Part B is one of the least valued. This is an area where Medigap policies have done a good job of providing necessary coverage. We recognize that in order to bring the cost of the program to a manageable level, something must be cut, and the Part B Cap seems to be the most expendable benefit. Our members have also indicated that the long-term hospitalization benefit is of greater importance and value to them than are some of the other major benefits.

The National Committee recognizes the difficulty of the task you have undertaken and appreciates the efforts you have made to date to arrive at a solution fair to senior citizens. We hope to continue working towards a solution including broad-based financing which will be fully acceptable to our members.

Sincerely,

MARTHA A. McSTEEN,
President.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, that is an integral part, obviously, of this bill. We have another Wirthlin poll that showed that only 37 percent of over 1,000 seniors polled say out-of-pocket part B is of great value, which, by the way, ranked about last in their priorities.

Mr. President, I want to keep prescription drugs; I want to keep home health; I want to keep respite; I want to keep mammograms; I want to keep hospice. All of those are now optional in the program which will cost the people more money in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Rhode Island as an option to preserving part B. So it is a question of priorities.

Mr. President, I yield myself an additional 1 minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. McCAIN. Is there one single senior organization in America that supports your proposal? No. Every single senior organization, with the exception of AARP, supports this proposal. Every single major one does. I suggest amendments that come in at this late time obviously have some things in them which need to be examined, including the $3,400. I do not call the $3,400 part B out-of-pocket coverage, as a matter of fact.

Mr. President, I think that a good-faith effort is being made here, and I respect the desire of the Members. It is just a difference in priorities. Obviously, I feel that with the backing of some 20 million seniors who support this bill and this legislation, such as our National Association of Retired Federal Employees and others, I think we should reject the Riegle-Chafee amendment.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute. First of all, you talk about not liking the cap on our doctor bills. You have no cap on your doctor bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator please address the Chair?

Mr. RIEGLE. The Chair is exactly right. I say to the Senator from Arizona, he has no cap on doctor bills. It can be $3,400; it can be $134,000; it can be $500,000. He has no cap in that area. And as for drugs, his proposal offers no prescription drugs. Yes, he has the Mitchell drugs, which we cover, but in terms of the prescription drugs that rank and file people all across this country have for all manner of illnesses that last over a long period of time, there is no protection in that package. There is protection in our package.

As to groups support it, we have the National Council of Senior Citizens supporting ours; we have the Villers Foundation supporting ours; we have the United Auto Workers supporting ours. And I talked to the person who heads this area for the Roosevelt group.

Mr. President, I yield myself 30 additional seconds.

He indicated to us that, in indicating their support for the McCain proposal, that it was done with the express statement that that did not preclude them from endorsing any other proposal. So let us not have any misleading statements made about that. They were looking at our proposal. We have not heard back one way or the other, but they made it very clear that they reserve the right to support other proposals. That is what the record shows.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. McCAIN. I yield myself 1 minute. Obviously, the Senator from Michigan does not understand what I was saying. No, there is no part B cap because the seniors say that is the least benefit that they prize. They want the others that are kept in my proposal and are made optional in the Senator's which, by the way, if they choose to take prescription drugs, they would only pay $350.12 a year additional. So when we say optional, we also mean you pay more.

I would be interested to know if the Jimmy Roosevelt group has chosen to endorse, and I am not surprised. They have not had a chance to examine it because none of us has. It has just arrived on the floor of the Senate whereas our proposal has been around for several months.

Let me repeat again to my friend from Michigan, the least desired is the cap on part B bills as decided by the seniors by poll after poll. So I urge him to go out next time and get some more support, have some contact with the seniors rather than showing up on the floor of the Senate with this proposal which hardly anybody has had a chance to examine.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I yield myself 20 additional seconds.

I think I probably talked to as many seniors as anybody in the Senate. I led the fight a few years ago to protect Social Security benefits. I am no late-arriving person to the fight to try to protect seniors, but what the official Government estimates show us is that there are 430,000 seniors who need this cap on doctor bills. There may not be anybody in that situation in the State of the Senator from Arizona, but I doubt it. He may be talking to the Wirthlin poll people and other people. It may be good to go out and have hearings and talk to other people in the country. Many, many people are being bankrupted by doctor bills they cannot afford and he has no cap whatsoever.

Mr. BENTSEN. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How much time?

Mr. RIEGLE. I yield as much time as the Senator requires.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am absolutely amazed by the statement of the Senator from California when he talks about a new bill being brought before us. When I think of the vast difference from the bill he originally introduced and see the continuing changes and then asking for unanimous consent, and then he changes it again after he brings it to the floor. Talk about changes, time and time again. We have a very difficult time keeping up with what his offer is. So I am amazed at the interchange here.

Mr. RIEGLE. I thank the Senator from Texas. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, we have dealt with polls a lot and know you can elicit a response with a certain question. The bottom line is the question ought to be, do you want doctor coverage? That is the question I have asked in my senior citizen meetings in the last couple of months. Eighty to ninety percent of my senior citizens said, "Yes, I need doctor coverage. If I do not have this coverage, I do not know where to go." That is the question: Do you want doctor coverage? That is the difference in the two versions.

Mr. RIEGLE. I thank the Senator. I reserve my time.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 18 minutes, 42 seconds.

Mr. McCAIN. I yield myself 1 minute, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. McCAIN. I thank the distinguished finance chairman. Basically, he knows my proposal has always been the same. The modification was a slight delay in implementation of a couple of the programs so that we could better meet the OMB targets. We have made the chairman of the Finance Committee and others very well aware of our proposals. I appreciate his interest as we have had to make slight modifications from time to time in those proposals, and I am grateful for his attention to them. I would like to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HEINZ] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the Riegle-Chafee amendment for several reasons. Some of them have to do with what kind of a deal it is to pay the flat premium and what you get in return for that flat premium, particularly in comparison to the McCain amendment. The deal is that under the Riegle-Chafee amendment, you get catastrophic hospital coverage; you get a better blood deductible; and you get a part B physician coverage that some of us have talked about before, but with a difference. Instead of clocking $1,500 of out-of-pocket expenses or $1,700 or $1,900, it raises that threshold by nearly twice to $3,300. The $1,900 threshold, by the way, was President Reagan's original suggestion, which was a tax attacked by a lot of people as being much too high a threshold; a ridiculously Scrooge-like threshold,

Now we have an amendment to raise that threshold by nearly twice that amount. My how the clock comes full circle.

Mr. President, the part B physician benefit in this proposal by Messrs. RIEGLE and CHAFEE is of benefit to only a tiny fraction of people and they do not know how many people that is. They cannot tell whether it is 1 percent of Medicare beneficiaries, 3 percent. They do not know. This is so far up the ladder, no one can figure out where it hits the wall.

But I can tell you that for the flat premium, you do not get home health care, respite care, mammography screening, Mitchell drugs, hospice care, all of which you do get under the McCain plan.

Then we have this optional program, and it is truly optional. We have never, in spite of some of the representations I have heard today, had an unsubsidized, truly optional program under Medicare. I hear people talking about the part B program being optional. Well, it is optional, but Uncle Sam pays 75 percent of it and the beneficiary through the part B premium pays only 25 percent. Maybe that is why 95 percent plus of all Medicare beneficiaries participate, because for every dollar they put up, someone else puts up $3. But in the Riegle-Chafee deal, Uncle Sam is not putting up a penny. This is strictly on the beneficiary's back, make no mistake about it.

It might not be a bad deal to give people that choice, if it was good health policy. I will give Senators CHAFEE and RIEGLE this. They have one benefit that I think is good health policy, the prescription drug benefit. Unfortunately, there are three very important health policy reasons why what they are proposing is, frankly, probably so deeply flawed as to make this one of the most dangerous proposals that has ever come before the Senate.

Why do I say that? The first reason is that we all know the cost estimates on many of these benefits, particularly the skilled nursing benefit, are so fluid that it is like trying to hold quicksilver in your hand. One moment the nursing home benefit costs $4 billion. In this amendment, it is priced at $16 billion or thereabouts. We have other estimates that show it is really $24 or $25 billion. Who knows what it is. Why is that relevant? Because the $15.40 monthly premium that that would allegedly be available for this optional package is, in fact, likely to be far higher, and the higher it gets the less likely people are to participate.

Second—and no one has talked about it—you have the problem of adverse selection. They have taken the same set of incentives or disincentives as we have for the part B premium, and they are very modest—you pay 10 percent more if you drop out and want back in. Why would anyone 65 want to buy this coverage until they were sick? You are going to have a terrible case of adverse selection that will drive the premiums up even more.

But even beyond that, Mr. President, there are two other really troublesome health care problems.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HEINZ. May I have 3 additional mintues.

Mr. McCAIN. I yield 3 additional minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has yielded 3 additional minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEINZ. First we are repeating the flaw of the original catastrophic bill which has a lot of money ending up for skilled nursing home care and not enough for home health care, for respite care, and for adult day care. We are providing a lot of money for institutionalization and nearly nothing, a fleabite to prevent it. This ought to be called the adult institutionalization act, because that is for what we are giving incentives.

Second, if you are a senior citizen, you are going to be one of the most confused people in the world should this become law because there are going to be two sets of home health care benefits; one for people who get this, one for people under normal Medicare—20 days for basic Medicare; 38 days for the optional package. For skilled nursing homes there will be a totally different set of benefits—8 days with a 20-percent copay, and then 150 days free for the optional plan; 20 days free and 21 to 100 days at 80-percent copay for the regular Medicare beneficaries.

Try to explain that one to your constituents. I cannot even explain it very well here.

Finally, we are going to do something we never intended to do. We are going to go into competition in this program with the private sector. We are going to be in competition with private Medigap companies. That is a whole new kettle of fish. If there is anyone in this body who wants to go into direct competition with the private sector, this is a great way to do it. I think that is a terrible mistake, and it is going to lead to a new type of approach to the Medicare system and to our approach to the private sector. I do not think we ought to cross that line.

So, Mr. President, for all these reasons—I have about 100 more—frankly, we ought to roundly defeat this amendment.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CHAFEE. I listened with care to the arguments of the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania who voted for the catastrophic measure when we passed it a year ago.

Mr. HEINZ. That is right.

Mr. CHAFEE. And of course that was not a bill that put the Government in competition with the private sector. It ruled out competition whatsoever. It took it over completely. There is nothing optional about it.

Mr. HEINZ. That is right.

Mr. CHAFEE. This program, it seems to me, follows the title of the bill. It is a program for catastrophic health insurance. In the first part it provides for long-stay hospitalization coverage and the second part provides for coverage for medical bills after a deductible has been reached.

Yes, it is a high deductible, but then following that high deductible the individual is covered.

Now, that is not true in the bill of the distinguished Senator from Arizona, as has been previously pointed out.

Second, much has been made about what is called adverse selection, namely a provision in the bill that will attract only the sick, that only the sick will come forward and take this additional premium and get that additional coverage.

That just is not so, Mr. President. First of all, there is a severe penalty for an individual trying to get in and out of the optional program. Each time that individual tries to come back in after having been out, there is a 10-percent surcharge that goes on his or her premium. And if he should go out and in again, the base—in other words, the next 10 percent—goes in top of the previous 10 percent that has been added.

The estimate that we received from the CBO is that 65 percent of seniors will avail themselves—30 seconds, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's 2 minutes has expired.

Mr. RIEGLE. I yield 30 additional seconds.

Mr. CHAFEE. The estimate that we received—you can attack the source of the estimates but, after all, Mr. President, we operate on estimates all the time—the estimate that we received from the Congressional Budget Office is that 65 percent of the seniors will take the optional premium and the services that are therein provided.

Mr. RIEGLE. We reserve the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Utah, Mr. HATCH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Riegle amendment is a seductive amendment but I want to make these points: No. 1, it provides part B coverage to the elderly but only to the tiniest fraction of the elderly. It does not trigger until they have spent $14,000 in doctor bills. That is an illusory benefit by anybody's imagination.

In order to get those benefits, however, they have to pay an additional $33 a month in 1991, every senior citizen who opts for it. The Riegle proposal is enticing with this one major flaw. How do we know that we can provide an optional benefit which includes the prescription drug benefit and the skilled nursing facility benefit especially when we cannot predict accurately what these costs are going to be?

To recap our current financial problems, in early 1989 CBO projected that the drug benefit would cost $5.7 billion over the first 4 years. However, in September 1989, CBO estimated that this benefit would cost $11.8 billion over the first 4 years. And administrative costs to run the program eat up one-half of the program costs.

That is almost a 50-percent increase. With this financial uncertainty, add to that the skilled nursing facility benefit. Hospital cost estimates have exploded over earlier analyses. Test programs changed from $31 to $48 billion.

Mr. President, let us not accept a program that is clouded by uncertainty, because I am certain there is not one Member who wants to be forced to revisit this legislation within the year because of deflated cost estimates. Let us just understand something.

The McCain amendment is understood by every senior citizen concerned with this issue in this country, and that is millions. They know what it is. They want it.

Anybody who votes for this amendment, the Riegle amendment, is going to have to explain that the rest of their lives. They are never going to be able to recover from it even if the Riegle amendment works, and it is illusory at best. If you stop and think about it, let us vote for the McCain amendment. He has earned the right. He has fought this fight. He has shown how it works. It is a minor cost compared to these other programs, and a major benefit for that minor cost.

I reserve the balance of my time and yield to the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONRAD). Who yields time?

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. EXON. I thank my colleague. I have stood on the floor and supported many times my friend and colleague from the State of Utah. I have never heard him, I do not think, be as far off base in the opinion of this Senator as the remarks that I just heard.

If it is true that this amendment is adopted, and this Senator strongly supports it, I am not fearful of going out and facing the senior citizens of Nebraska, or the senior citizens of any other State, to explain what we are doing for them or trying to do in this bill which is a true catastrophic plan. There is no free lunch.

I did not intend to make the point, but since the Senator from Utah has attacked this bill on totally unsound ground, I can only say that if the McCain amendment becomes law, there is going to be a great deal of explaining to do because of the cap loss in the McCain provision. That is where the explanation is going to have to be made.

I suspect this bill is not perfect. I suspect, Mr. President, no bill can be perfect under the present circumstances. I thought long and hard about all of the ideas that have been put forward, including the one where the House of Representatives just simply repealed the whole act.

While that is still a possibility and a route that I may have to take, I simply believe and plead that we keep our rhetoric within due bounds, and recognize that there are going to be differences of opinion. I am not trying to destroy the merits. I am not trying to destroy the benefits of any other proposal.

I simply say that with the backing of my good friend from Michigan, my good friend from Rhode Island, and the chairman of the Finance Committee, who has jurisdiction, this bill simply could not possibly be as bad as some on that side seem to believe.

Mr. President, I rise to support the amendment. I believe it is a straightforward approach to dealing with the problems presented by last year's overwhelming passage of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

In my deliberations on this legislation, I looked at total repeal, such as the proposal the House recently passed. While it is still an option, I do not feel that it is the best possible option at this point in time. This amendment will repeal the surtax, which is by far the most onerous portion of the catastrophic bill, retains the extended hospitalization benefits and the cap on part B doctors' bills. It also retains the spousal impoverishment and other Medicaid provisions.

More importantly, it retains all the rest of the benefits we passed last year as part of the original bill, but makes them optional. They are not tied to the other part B benefits, these new benefits are truly optional. These new optional benefits are paid for by another flat premium that starts out at $15.40 a month, rising to $30.30 a month in 1991. This is a bargain policy for the benefits it retains. For those who voluntarily want or need it. This is a true catastrophic bill.

Mr. President, I would love to be able to provide first dollar, top-notch health coverage for our elderly at no or little expense to them. Unfortunately, that is outside the current realm of fiscal reality. With that thought in mind, I believe this amendment is the best approach currently on the table. This amendment allows important benefits to be retained while paying for it with the standard minimal premium assessed to each individual receiving benefits.

As I stated earlier, I heartily endorsed the concepts put forth by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act and with this amendment we can maintain that concept. We can repeal the senior surtax and still keep some of the benefits that will help the individuals faced with overwhelming medical bills.

Mr. President, I hope we can adopt this important amendment and thus be on the road to offering the solution demanded by the senior citizens of this Nation.

I reserve the balance of my time and yield back to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. RIEGLE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIEGLE. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, three brief points. We hear during the course of this debate what the estimated costs were at the time of the passage of the original bill, and how they are going to go up, up over the period of the next several years. There are two sides on that coin. They are only estimates, first of all. But if the estimates are accurate and it is going to be more costly, what is this going to mean? Are there going to be more and more American families that are going to be bankrupted? Somebody is going to have to pay. Somebody is going to have to fork out.

If all these figures are accurate, you are pointing to hundreds of thousands of American families that are going to be bankrupt. What we are attempting to do here is to try to minimize that possibility down the road, No. 1.

No. 2, this is the last opportunity to develop a program that is going to deal with outpatient prescription drugs. This is the last opportunity on that. There are more families that exceed the ceiling because of prescription drug costs than parts A or B, or A and B combined.

So if you are talking about hardships on families, particularly in the area of prescription drugs, this is your last chance.

Third, on the supplemental benefits, years of hearings have demonstrated that 40 percent of the cost of supplemental benefits go for administration and profits of those companies that sell them. The Riegle-Chafee approach is an imaginative, creative way to make available a choice for millions of elderly people who want and need that particular benefit.

I think the Riegle-Chafee measure should have the support of the Members of this body.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. RIEGLE. I thank the Senator. I reserve the balance of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. How much time remains on both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona controls 8½ minutes, and the Senator from Michigan controls 2 minutes and 46 seconds.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, it is not often in life when you make a serious mistake, and you have a chance to undo it and start over again. That is the issue that is before the Senate today. The issue is whether we look at what we did last year and start over again, or instead whether we attempt to salvage something of last year's program, patch it up, put a retread on the tires and send it out on the road again.

What we have been doing today is voting on a series of proposals to try to salvage something of last year's catastrophic health insurance program. The Riegle amendment is just one in this line of efforts to keep the old system going.

Mr. President, I think it is not the best approach for us to try to patch something together. I think we have a rare opportunity today to undo an unpopular program of 1988 and to take a fresh look at the health care needs of this country. I think it would be a mistake on the floor of the Senate to try to put together some jerry-rigged approach to fixing the 1988 bill. I especially believe that it would be a mistake to pass an amendment which most of us did not know of and have not heard of as recently as an hour ago.

Senator ROTH, I, and others favor outright repeal. Why do we favor repeal? Not because we are against having a health care program for the elderly—far from it. We assume we are going to have a health care program. We assume we are going to have a new one. But, Mr. President, next spring the Pepper Commission is to be heard from. The Pepper Commission will issue a report on two recognized needs, one for long-term care, and the other for the 31 million Americans who have no health insurance whatever.

Why should we not take those needs, plus the question of cost containment, plus the question of malpractice reform, and deal with them all at the same time? I am concerned that if we enact legislation hurriedly now, just as we did in 1988, we will be repeating the 1988 mistake.

I am concerned that if we do what Senator RIEGLE wants us to do, we will be precluding the choices that we should be examining when we have an opportunity to deal with this matter comprehensively next year. For that reason, I oppose the Riegle amendment. I think it would be a serious mistake to adopt it. For that reason, I believe that the most responsible thing for us to do is to repeal the 1988 legislation with a view to starting over again at the earliest possible date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. I yield my remaining time to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized for——

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, before doing so, I ask unanimous consent to add Senators BIDEN, SHELBY, HEFLIN, JEFFORDS, DIXON, and HATFIELD as cosponsors of the McCain bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry. How much time do I get yielded to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me first congratulate the Senator from Missouri for his argument. I will make a slightly different argument. I think part of it will lead in the same direction.

First of all, there has been a bit of a discussion here about competition with Medigap insurers on this kind of an optional plan. Maybe that would be a good idea; maybe it would not be.

There are no Medigap private sector insurers covering this kind of coverage. I think I know why. Let me tell you the kind of things that are in this plan. We add a couple of days to home health care coverage. We add a little bit to respite care, but only if you have very high medical costs we add drug coverage and mammography screening.

Mr. President, the reason the private sector does not favor these is, on the one hand, because the package is bizarre; and second, nobody knows the cost of them. That is generally referred to as being actuarial unpredictable. That goes to the 65 percent assumption rule as to participants. We could not find out how in the world somebody assured 65 percent of seniors would participate.

Anybody can call CBO up and ask how they came up with that assumption. I am going to just use two words "very uncertain." You can use it, too, but remember "very uncertain." CBO will use it.

Does that matter? Mr. President, that matters, especially when an amendment like this is dropped onto the floor of the Senate as a suggestion to the senior citizens of the United States and U.S. Senators that we have something really good for seniors.

Mr. President, if participation is not 65 percent, the program is in trouble. You may not be able to deliver the services that the people paid you for. Mr. President, the 65 percent is assumption too high, but we will have promised the senior citizens this coverage.

Let me assure those who serve on the Finance Committee of the U.S. Senate, they will pay if this plan is adopted. We will be in here in about 2 years. This actuarial uncertainty will become a reality. This promise to all these people, if you would like to opt into this very, very new package—a little respite care, a little home health care, drugs, and we are not quite certain how much drugs are going to cost, but if you opt into that—it costs $350 per year.

I can predict that the Senator from Missouri and others will have this in their lap to supplement with tax revenues, because these premiums will not be able to pay for the benefits. That just means that we have a difficult decision to make here about a complex issue. If nothing else, we ought to act in areas that we understand.

My last thought about this is—I want to say to my good friends, the two principal sponsors, Senators, RIEGLE and CHAFEE, I do not oppose this for any reason as to who started it, whether it is yours or someone else's.

I hope you know I opposed my dear friend and my leader on this side, Senator DOLE, this morning. I oppose this in all good conscience, from my standpoint. You have come up with something difficult to develop and worked hard at it. But in this case I do not think it is the way to undo one mess by creating another mess.

To say that this is optional seems to me, on the one hand, to offer a big false promise, and on the other hand, creates potential for us having to come in and pay for it. There will be a Medicap fill-in, but it will not be by insurers. It will be by the taxpayers of the country.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, as a member of the HHS authorizing committee and the appropriating committee, I am in deep support of this amendment. I have today supported the motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to the catastrophic health care bill. In so doing, I want to emphasize my desire that however we chose to deal with the question of providing catastrophic health care coverage for our Nation's elderly, we should be guided by the following objectives:

First, that some form of basic coverage be maintained; and second, that we eliminate the present surtax levied upon our elderly for the coverage provided. I believe that the amendment before us, sponsored by Senator RIEGLE and Senator CHAFEE, meets those objectives, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Over the past months, it has become increasingly clear that many senior citizens object to the concept of a surtax in any form. They believe that a special tax for any segment of our population is unfair and unacceptable. In addition, many senior citizens who would pay substantially less than the maximum surtax of $800 have come to believe that all seniors would pay that same maximum rate. The anger and confusion that has accompanied anticipated implementation of the existing law has been divisive and confusing. In addition, the debate has focused on the difference between the interests of our seniors who have ample savings and insurance and those who do not.

I believe that Congress has an obligation to respond to the objections surrounding the surtax by repealing it, and I intend to so vote. But I also believe we have an obligation to those seniors who need coverage to protect their interests. We must maintain a basic level of benefits, based upon a flat premium, that will address those most pressing needs of our senior citizens in the area of health care. In the years to come, we as a society will have opportunity to discuss the wisdom and the fairness of the surtax we are repealing today. Perhaps in the long run, this discussion will lead us to further explore the basic problems of health care coverage that still exist in this country, namely, the 37 million Americans who have no form of health care coverage at all. In striving to maintain the most urgently needed portions of this plan, given the difficult budget constraints we face, I hope that the final version of S. 1726 we approve today will meet the objectives of basic fairness to our senior citizens, and fiscal responsibility toward all of our citizens. Because this amendment does so, I intend to vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. RIEGLE. I yield 30 additional seconds.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope that this package will be adopted to protect that large group of people who still need basic coverage, and I compliment the Senator for bringing it forward. It is the best chance we may have in this Senate to pass a bill to provide our seniors with basic catastrophic coverage without significantly adding to our national debt.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, may I ask how much time remains on both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 1 minute. There is no time remaining on the other side.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, in that final minute, let me say that I appreciate the support of my cosponsors, Senators CHAFEE, EXON, and BENTSEN. We have held off circulating this widely, because we wanted to give others time to see what they could do.

With respect to the cost of this program, the administrative costs under private Medigap programs are estimated to be 25 percent. Under Medicare, administrative costs are at 3 percent. We can provide these benefits on a voluntary basis to seniors who want to elect them at the lowest possible costs, and we can save heartache and broken lives and broken family situations all across this country. We revised this in a way that meets the needs of the seniors.

Most of the seniors that I talked to like this plan. It is solid and meets their basic needs. We have prescription drugs. The other plans do not. We provide a cap on doctor bills. The other plans do not. This is the best possible plan under the circumstances, and I ask my colleagues to support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The question occurs on the amendment.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, on this I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

NOT VOTING—1

Matsunaga

So the amendment (No. 988) was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May we have order in the Chamber? Senators who are talking, if they could take those conversations to the Cloakroom. The Senate will not proceed until the Senate is in order.

Under the previous order, the Senator from Nebraska is to be recognized.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will withhold. The Senate is not in order. The Senate will not proceed to further business until we restore order.

The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, let me first make an inquiry. We are on the Exon amendment and there is 15 minutes equally divided; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the amendment I am offering is a clean compromise to the problems presented by last year's passage of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

As I stated earlier today, on October 27, 1987, I joined 85 of my colleagues here on the floor of the U.S. Senate in approving the Senate version of this bill. I supported the intent of the catastrophic bill then and I support the intent of the bill now. However, I still have reservations that the package passed last year did not do more toward the costs of long-term care. However, we can work on that once we get this catastrophic legislation under control.

My amendment will repeal the surtax, which is what the seniors of Nebraska object to most strenuously, and instruct the Finance Committee to decide which of the remaining benefits can be retained and financed by the flat part B premium, which my amendment also retains. My amendment also retains the Medicaid provisions in the catastrophic bill, the Pepper Commission, and technical corrections to OBRA 1987.

My amendment has a caveat. If legislation implementing these changes is not signed by the President by December 31, 1989, the benefits, with the exception of the Medicaid provisions, will be repealed. There is a grandfather provision included so that no one will be kicked out of the hospital if repeal takes place. I believe the Senate Finance Committee is the appropriate body to determine which combination of benefits should be retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will suspend one moment we will be able to restore order.

The Chair will also advise the Senator from Nebraska that, in order for the time to be properly allocated, the Senator from Nebraska would need to send his amendment to the desk or have time yielded off the bill.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes, only, of time, with the understanding that I may offer the amendment at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the committee has the expertise in health issues, access to the cost data, and the staff resources to handle this issue effectively. While I could certainly pick and choose my favorites to include in this amendment, I may not pick the most appropriate combinations as to provide the most benefits or serve the greatest population of individuals.

But I have been advised by many members of that committee they do not think it is wise. For reasons best known to them, they do not want to reconsider this proposal, which I think would properly be in their charge.

In fact, it is not only in their charge, Mr. President. It seems to me I remember a time or two when the Finance Committee has been on the floor of the U.S. Senate, having long, drawn out arguments about protecting of turf and people doing things that more properly belong in the Finance Committee.

This would be a good opportunity for the Finance Committee to not only exercise their turf, but to do what I think they could do better than anyone else. We have a chance to make positive changes. We can repeal the senior surtax and still keep some of the benefits.

Mr. President, I think this is a very good amendment. I worked very hard and I talked to many of my colleagues about it. However, I think time is extremely short. I believe the patience of the body is being tested and, Mr. President, since a case has been made on a whole series of votes on the floor today as to possible alternatives, I do not intend to offer the amendment I had planned because I feel it would be unnecessarily wasting time of this body.

Therefore, I am not going to offer the amendment in question and I hope some of my colleagues will join me in a spirit of cooperation, trying to cut down the time being used, and move our work along much more rapidly than we have. Therefore, I advise the Chair I will not offer the amendment as I previously intended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Delaware may be recognized at this time for the purposes of presenting amendments.

The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, due to the slight miscalculation about the time that was going to be consumed by the Senator from Nebraska, I do not think the Senators are here who are involved in this. I ask unanimous consent for about a 3-minute delay so people can get over here.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, if we have to have a quorum call——

Mr. McCAIN. I withdraw my request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I see nothing wrong with a quorum call if that would accommodate all. I was trying to say, as I suggested, the time used in the quorum call be charged equally to each side in the spirit of moving things along a little bit quicker than we ordinarily like to do in this body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Reserving the right to object, taking the time from what?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I object. We are ready to move forward with the Danforth amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Senator from Delaware.

AMENDMENT NO. 989

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, the people have spoken and our colleagues in the House of Representatives have listened. Two days ago, the House passed an amendment to repeal catastrophic by an overwhelming 360 to 66. I propose we do the same in the Senate.

And, to this end, I rise today, on behalf of Senators DANFORTH, NICKLES, SHELBY, REID, BRYAN, HELMS, GRAHAM of Florida, COATS, and myself to offer an amendment that repeals the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. And let there be no mistake about it, this amendment is the only real opportunity Senators have to vote for repeal.

To put it simply, this amendment repeals all current and future catastrophic benefits except for some transition rules that help accomplish repeal in a manner that is not disruptive to individuals currently receiving benefits.

The surtax and all other catastrophic premiums scheduled to come into effect would be repealed. I want to emphasize that the surtax is repealed effective January 1, 1989. Any supplemental premium moneys collected will be returned to those individuals who have paid them. The catastrophic flat premium of $4 per month would be repealed as of January 1, 1990.

In addition, it is important to point out that the Medicaid changes in the Catastrophic Coverage Act would all remain intact. These changes include the provision which is designed to prevent spousal impoverishment, the Medicaid buy-in and the mom and infant program.

The choice now between repeal and the McCain proposal to retain certain catastrophic benefits. The problems is we do not have adequate information as to whether or not the McCain proposal is financially sound or meets the needs of senior citizens.

In fact, the real problem is there are no facts about catastrophic. We are asked to make decisions about changes on soft data and bad estimates. We are constantly getting new estimates that are always going higher. For example, the cost of the program has soared over 50 percent since it was passed from $30 billion to $48 billion. The Senator from Arizona claims his bill is self-financing, but I would remind my colleagues that the Finance Committee made the same claim last year.

Not only do we not know what catastrophic will cost, we do not know the extent of duplication. Clearly, we know that benefits are duplicated by coverage already provided to Federal and State employees, military retirees, and many in the private sector and unions. Catastrophic will make them pay more for benefits already provided at minimal or no cost to them. That fact leads us to the heart of the issue—Does catastrophic insurance provide what seniors want or need?

This answer is obviously not. It duplicates existing benefits and it does not address long-term care.

The path is clear. We must repeal catastrophic. A piecemeal approach to changing the catastrophic law will not work. We must stand back and take a comprehensive look at health care, so we can make a fresh start on changes for the future. Changes that meet real need and are financially sound.

The only way to accomplish that is to repeal catastrophic. I say again this amendment is the only real opportunity Senators will have to vote for repeal.

I urge my colleagues to follow the lead of the House of Representatives; to listen to their senior citizen constituents. Vote for this amendment. Vote to repeal.

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Missouri who has been patiently waiting, I say to my friend from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized for 5 mintues.

Mr. BOND. Thank you, Mr. President. I rise in opposition to this amendment, because I am pleased to join with the Senator from Arizona. I am sure all of us know by now, and we have heard from our seniors that they are objecting to the financing, the surtax that has come along in the catastrophic health care insurance program.

When most of my colleagues in Missouri write to me about this program, usually they refer to it as the "catastrophic tax act." We know what they are talking about. They are talking about the proposed surtax that will come into being. I have had letters saying the catastrophic surtax law is totally unacceptable and should be repealed. Clearly, these senior citizens want the surtax repealed, and I do not think there is any debate on that.

Some people have said the bill is unworkable and fatally flawed. I believe that there is one catastrophic mistake—it is not necessarily fatal to the entire bill—where virtually all the complaints can be traced. Congress decided to expand the original legislation far beyond truly catastrophic protection. The first bill proposed by the administration contained only protection from truly catastrophic events. Dr. Bowen made a very compelling case for that coverage. It was to be financed entirely by the $4 per month additional premium and participation would have been voluntary.

Once this body got a hold of the bill, it became a Christmas tree and other benefits like financing for prescription and doctors' visits became ornaments and baubles on the tree. I think these are things that are terribly important, do not get me wrong, but are terribly expensive and drove the cost of the program up.

The committee looked at the program and realized they would have to make participation mandatory for the program to work; they would have to charge the wealthier beneficiaries more than $4 a month to make it work. And all these changes were necessary to pay for the additional ornaments and balls.

We believe the cost estimates for CBO show us that the highly unpopular and unfair surtax can be eliminated, repealed without losing the core catastrophic benefits seniors still need.

The need for shelter from truly catastrophic illness has not changed. The need is the same as it was when we began this debate 3 years ago.

I do not believe that the Senate should follow our colleagues in the other body and repeal the Act outright. The surtax is what is the objectionable portion, not the additional monthly premium of $4 or so. No one who I have talked to has complained about that. The basic truly catastrophic protection benefits that went into effect early this year should not be repealed. These are the acute hospital care benefits, hospice care and protection from spousal impoverishment. I do not believe seniors object to the slight monthly increase for that kind of protection. The proposal we are offering keeps those core benefits which were at the heart of the original catastrophic health care program.

If, Mr. President, we repeal the entire program and not just its flaws, we will be right back where we were when we started out 3 years ago. The need for protection from financial devastation, from long hospital stays has not changed. The need for assurance against spousal impoverishment has not changed.

Some of my colleagues point out that one pressing need, that of long-term health care, has not been addressed, and I agree. The Senate should discuss long-term care, but that should not preempt any care, any shelter from those suffering catastophic illness. But if we can repeal the surtax and change the catastrophic Act into a program that does what we intended it to do 3 years ago, should we not do that, instead of simply throwing up our hands and trying to wipe them clean?

There is a tidal wave of opposition to the current Act, but the Senate has an obligation not to be swept aside. If we take the course that some propose and scrap it and start all over, we will be going through the same process again. I imagine the debate will be a mini replay of the debate we had 2 years ago, everyone trying to salvage favorite provisions. We will see amendments for prescription drugs, some say scale the surtax back a little bit, but we should be talking about catastrophic care, not a prescription drugs act, not a nursing home act, not a doctor's visit bill.

From the 17,000 letters I have received on the subject, the message from my constituents is clear: Long-term hospitalization protection and spousal impoverishment are the most important benefits of the Act, and they want the surtax repealed. The benefits that are scaled back, such as outpatient prescription drugs, are not widely viewed as core. Therefore, I believe that the Senator from Alabama has found the right way to go about it: Give the seniors what they need and want, give them catastrophic protection at an affordable price.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROTH. I yield 2 minutes to the senior Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS). The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise today to voice my support for this amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

I clearly acknowledge the pressing need for protection against the insurmountable costs of long-term health care for our senior citizens.

But the solution, in this case, compounds the problem. I cannot accept the present plan whereby seniors bear the full brunt of financing catastrophic care.

A broad-based tax is only one of several alternatives we need to study to produce an acceptable means of funding catastrophic care.

There are potentially 32 million Medicare beneficiaries who require protection against the financial burden of extended illness. The Catastrophic Coverage Act is not the best form of protection.

After extensive assessment of the act, I am convinced we need to explore other ways to respond to this health care dilemma.

Mr. President, the constituents in my State have been particularly vocal as to the catastrophic coverage approach. Their concern prompted me and my colleague, Senator BRYAN, to introduce the first bill in the Senate which will repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act. This we did in January 1989.

When 18 senior citizens in Las Vegas organized a group called Seniors Coalition Against the Catastrophic Act, they probably did not envision being able to create a ground swell of support from people throughout Nevada, California, Illinois, and other parts of this great country.

When I initially introduced my legislation, I had not expected the concept would receive such widespread support. I do not think any of us did. We thought we had achieved an enormous breakthrough by passing the Catastrophic Coverage Act and by merely paying attention to the issue and taking action, we did accomplish something.

But in our haste to solve the problem—in our urgency to act—we came up with a less than adequate solution.

Our legislation has created considerable confusion among seniors. There are questions of monthly premiums, percentages to be paid, increased taxes.

Frankly, Mr. President, there are too many questions and too few answers.

Our cost estimates for the program at the time it was enacted are alarming lower than what we now envision the program will cost. So who will pay—how much—and how often?

Although I advocate this amendment to repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act, I adamantly believe that we cannot repeal and walk away.

We must get back to the drawing board and develop a feasible plan for protecting older Americans against the exorbitant costs of long hospital stays, doctor's visits, and prescription drugs.

All Americans, Mr. President, have at least one thing in common. We all grow old. Access to adequate, affordable health care is something we all need—either now or later. I support this amendment because the approach enacted into law last year is not a proper solution to this pressing problem.

The question of long-term health care for senior citizens is an emotionally charged issue that takes on a life of its own. But in this case, we must put objectivity and practicality before our emotions Let us develop an approach that can truly be defined as a solution.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I congratulate Senator ROTH and also Senator DANFORTH. In addition, I congratulate Senator MCCAIN. I think both of these proposals are giant steps in the right direction, both of which would repeal the surtax, both of which would repeal a significant portion of the benefits which the American people did not want and did not ask for—as a matter of fact, both of which repeal most of the benefits that we find three-fourths of the senior citizens already had when we mandated on them the so-called Catastrophic Act. I think it was appropriately named. I think it was catastrophic for senior citizens, and certainly catastrophic for senior citizens who pay taxes. It is a very expensive bill when you consider that seniors are being taxed an additional 20 percent, and it continues to escalate. It needs to be repealed. I am optimistic it will be repealed tonight.

I support the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. I really do not want to see this bill go to conference. I am afraid the primary sponsors of the legislation would create a "son of catastrophic," it may well be catastrophic for senior citizens and for taxpayers again.

I think we should pass the language in the House-passed bill. It keeps the Medicaid portion in last year's bill and I think that is appropriate. If we are going to have an expansion in health care, let us have it for those people on the lowest end of the totem pole, those people who do not have it, those people who cannot afford it. For those who have coverage let us not mandate a Federal program on top of another. For those Federal employees, for those people in the private sector, for those who had coverage, let us not duplicate it. Why have the expansion in health care from 60 to 360 days if their employer already provides it? If that is part of their retirement plan, why should we duplicate it with a Federal plan?

That is why I think the amendment of the Senator from Delaware is most appropriate. We do not need to duplicate services that were already provided. I think it is vitally important we keep the Medicaid expansion in last year's bill, that we keep spousal impoverishment. Those are good, positive changes. If further changes are needed for those people who might fall through the cracks, that would mean expansion of Medicaid. I might tell my colleagues we are doing that with the reconciliation bill. If we do need to do more for those people who cannot afford it, let us do it, but let us not mandate it for all senior citizens.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to my friend from Illinois [Mr. SIMON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, and my colleagues in the Senate, let me talk a little practical politics first. I know there is some confusion.

There are Members of the Senate who want to vote for the McCain proposal but who want to vote for repeal if the McCain proposal does not carry. There is a very practical way of doing that, and that is vote against the repeal at this point and then, if the amendment of my friends from Delaware and Missouri does not carry, we can vote for the McCain legislation. If the amendment of the Senator from Delaware carries, then we will still get a rollcall on final passage. Those of us who really prefer the McCain amendment can at that point vote for repeal.

That, frankly, is what I intend to do. I think the McCain proposal is clearly the preferable course. The McCain proposal gives us the opportunity to move away from the income tax, the surtax on seniors. It is simply totally unjustified to have those over 65 pay the highest rate of income tax of any of our citizens.

To those who argue, well, they are the beneficiaries, we do not do that with any other part of our income tax. We do not say to farmers, you are going to pay more in income tax because of farm subsidies. We do not say to parents, you are going to pay more in income tax because of education.

And then we do a second thing with the McCain amendment. We provide protection for people.

My distinguished friend from Nevada, the senior Senator from Nevada, one of the finest Members of this body, said, speaking in behalf of the Danforth-Roth amendment, we cannot repeal it and just walk away. But with all due respect to my colleague from Nevada, that is precisely what we will do if we just have repeal. I do not think that is the course we ought to follow. I think we ought to say no to the income tax and we ought to say yes to senior citizens; we are going to give you some additional protection.

There is a very simple way of doing that. That is to vote against the pending amendment and, if that amendment is defeated, then we can vote for the McCain proposal. If the Roth-Danforth proposal carries, then those of us who want to go on record clearly in opposition to this surtax, facing that kind of choice, can get a rollcall on final passage and vote against it. But I think clearly the better alternative for us in the Senate, the better alternative for the Nation, the better alternative for senior citizens in this country is to defeat the present amendment and vote for the McCain proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, how much leader time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I will use about 3 minutes.

Mr. President, I do not believe I have any influence on this issue. I have already spoken on the Durenberger proposal. I am not certain how many votes we had but it was a good proposal. So now we are faced with well, now we are just going to throw everything out, give up; we made a mistake, so let us start all over. I think that would be a grave mistake. It might be for the moment perceived and maybe claimed to be a victory by some of the leaders of senior citizens groups, but I must say those who we do not hear from, the poor, the elderly and the sick are probably not going to contact us but they are going to wonder one of these days what happened to the benefits they had and they will be looking to us as those responsible for taking them away.

There is no question that our initial intention was to help protect against catastrophic costs that arose as a result of prolonged hospitalization and/or the use of physician services. What we ended up with was some of this, an attempt at adding some long-term care benefits and an entirely new and costly drug benefit. They said we do not want that, spoken loudly and clearly. We have the message. We made mistakes along the way. We passed out benefits, more than anybody anticipated, and for more than anybody wanted to pay.

But a vote for full repeal of the few catastrophic benefits along with the premiums used to finance them I think would do harm. Who are we going to hurt? If we can, let us step away from the issue of the surtax. That is behind us now. The surtax is not going to be on the floor anymore this evening. That is over with. Step away from the issue—unless we do not pass anything, and then we go to the conference with present law and repeal.

But if we can step away from the issue of the surtax, look at who loses if we repeal the entire benefit. In the frenzy over the premium, we have lost sight of the fact that this program has been to help some of the sickest among our elderly. For example, CBO estimated that 13 percent of the Medicare beneficiaries would be helped by the provision providing unlimited hospitalization; 33 percent by the limit on out-of-pocket costs; 11 percent by the new mammography screening provisions; and 27 percent by the new drug benefits.

Thirteen or thirty-three percent may not sound like much to some but it translates to between 3.9 and 9.9 million people who are sick and at risk of impoverishment because of an illness. We have been hearing from some of the wealthiest citizens speaking in opposition. That certainly is right in this country, and they have done a very good job. They have succeeded.

Surtax is gone. But let us not forget that some of our poor elderly will be helped by this new program. To repeal this program and to rescind the benefit means leaving these people without our help.

I for one think that is the wrong thing to do. I believe the House made the wrong decision and the Senate should not repeat the same error. The Senate would be the first to acknowledge, this Senate, if we have gone too far as I said earlier. We promised too much. We taxed too much. Let us not, as I said, throw it all out.

So what is the alternative? It is coming up next. I believe the next best option is still to come. That is the McCain proposal which preserves some of the critical elements of the program, and I urge my colleagues to defeat this measure.

Let us move on to the McCain measure. Senator MCCAIN has been at the forefront of this battle. I guess before the night is over, it may prove he was right from the first and some of us were mistaken.

But, in any event, we have had good debates today. It would be my hope that we reject those who would repeal the catastrophic coverage and drop back to the McCain proposal because I believe as Senator MCCAIN has told me privately and publicly on this floor many times there are many seniors out there who really do not prefer they lose everything. They never thought they were going to lose everything. They are if this repeal passes. They are going to lose everything because that is it.

How long will it take us to pass something else? We will not do it this year. It would be tough to do it next year. It is going to take a long, long time.

I know I have friends on this side who are leading the effort to repeal. I respect them. Senator ROTH, Senator DANFORTH are both on the Finance Committee doing an outstanding job. They have a different point of view. But I do not agree with them on this issue.

So I hope my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will reject the pending effort, and then vote for the proposal by Senator MCCAIN and others.

I reserve any leader time.

Mr. ROTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I think one thing ought to be made clear here at this point because we are about to make an important decision. The point I want to make clear is we would not be here tonight making history on this bill were it not for one man. There is one person who brought the United States Senate here tonight, and his name is JOHN MCCAIN. Without his courage, without his persistence, and without his leadership, there is no way that we would be here tonight.

So whatever we decide, whether we repeal catastrophic, or whether we accept his proposal, if the senior citizens of America want to know who did the job, who did the work, who stood up to the pressure, who had it done, JOHN MCCAIN had it done.

Mr. President, I am going to vote for repeal though I think the McCain proposal is a good proposal. It is a proposal that I have cosponsored. I would view its adoption as victory. But repeal gives us a guarantee that the same people who wrote this bill to begin with will not have an opportunity to do it again in conference. I think that is the strongest argument for repeal even though, let me make it clear, the adoption of the McCain amendment is victory on this issue.

Finally, let me say, Mr. President, a lot of votes I cast here on the floor, at least in my own mind, I figure I am never going to be vindicated until I get to heaven. A year ago when I voted against catastrophic coverage, I figured that down the road in heaven St. Peter would open the golden book and weigh it out and say, "You done good."

This is one of the those rare instances where within 1 year everything has changed. What has changed is that under the requirement that we pay as we go, under a requirement for deficit reduction, the giveaway policies of the past ran up against fiscal reality. We had to pay for this entitlement up front. And it proves that collectivism is never popular if the beneficiaries have to pay.

That is why we are here tonight making history. Whether the repeal passes or the McCain amendment passes, this will be the first time in American history that both bodies of Congress have voted to roll back a massive new entitlement.

Mr. President, I am proud to be here, and we would not be here tonight were it not for Senator JOHN MCCAIN, the good captain, and I am proud of him. I am sure that every senior citizen, including my momma, would like to give him a big kiss. [Laughter.]

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Who yields time?

The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator are a great embarrassment to me.

I yield 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Delaware wishing to yield time at this moment?

Mr. ROTH. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then I will recognize the Senator from Arizona.

The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. I want to tell the Senator from Texas that one time I was at a meeting. The citizens put their hands up, and said, "That great mayor; if he is in heaven, he is paving the streets of heaven." Somebody jumped up and said, "The problem is we are afraid he went somewhere else, in the opposite direction." I wonder if the Senator from Texas was not a bit presumptuous here tonight. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. President, I just want to ask a question.

Frankly, Senator GRAMM made my argument right at the end of his remarks. I wonder what assurance we have, if the McCain bill passes. I am for it. I am a cosponsor. But it is going to go over to conference.

I really feel a little strange about sending it off to conference with those who have taken all of this time to see the light, and then only reluctantly and then only under enormous pressure. I have a little bit of doubt that we will come back here after a conference with the McCain bill. That kind of bothers me.

I wish somebody who is running the committee could come down here and tell everybody if we pass Senator MCCAIN's bill it will become law in conference. Not having any such assurance, I am not at all convinced that we ought not repeal it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RUDMAN. I thank my friend from Arizona.

Mr. President, I listened to my friend from Texas who I agree with most of the time. I think if you think that well of someone and you give them such praise on the floor, I say to my friend from Texas you are almost obliged to vote against the pending amendment and vote for the McCain amendment.

I also join, and I think everyone here recognizes my friend from Arizona truly has made this a personal crusade. A crusader sometimes becomes very unpopular. The Senator from Arizona has taken a great deal of criticism and some abuse for his position. But he has been unswerving in bringing this issue forward. We admire that on this floor.

Mr. President, I want to speak briefly about two things: Why are we here at all? We are here because there was an enormous problem in the country recognized by the President of the United States, brought forth by his Secretary of Health and Human Services, and we acted on that. We probably acted in a faulty way but we acted on it. If we repeal this tonight, the problem that we all recognized at that time still exists.

The problem is not going away. With all due respect to my friend from Texas, if he thinks that it is going to be over tonight if we repeal it, it is not going to be over at all. When seniors around this country find out now that the entire benefit is gone, I happen to believe that the reaction will be even more strident than the reaction that we heard when they found out they had to pay for some part of that benefit, which I happen to believe was still a sound idea. I believe when we eventually reach long-term care, that idea will be revisited.

Let me say one further thing. The argument that if this goes to conference, somehow it is going to get Christmas-treed with all of those things it did the last time, just does not hold water. And my proof of that is very simple. Look at the record as to what the vote was in the House of Representatives. The vote was so overwhelming for repeal that it just defies anyone's wisdom that the House would now come back and attempt to do the same thing all over again; that just will not work; that argument just does not wash.

We should not repeal this. If we repeal it, we leave a problem with the country that we all know exists. We leave it unmet. Vote for the McCain amendment; vote to defeat this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Nevada.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise to support the Danforth-Roth amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. In January of this year, my colleague, Senator REID, and I introduced a piece of legislation that called for the repeal of this legislation. I understand, although I was not a member of the 100th Congress, the enthusiasm that greeted the passage of this Act, at the urging of President Reagan. It was conceived with the best of intentions to create additional insurance for the elderly.

This was so our growing elderly population did not have to fear being dependent upon public assistance if they were indeed to be stricken by major illness. It should not be forgotten, however, that it was the last administration's insistence that the beneficiaries pay for the entire cost of this coverage that led to the onerous financing mechanism of a surtax on senior citizens.

As we review the fiasco of this program, it has become a troubling note that has entered this debate. The administration wants to keep the surtax to help to make a dent in our massive deficit. However misguided the financing of this legislation was, it was never Congress' intention to make this a tax program to reduce the deficit.

The elderly in my State have been communicating to me and to my senior colleague by the thousands, in town hall meetings, by mail, even by casual conversation. What they are saying, "These are not the benefits that we need, not the benefits we want, and this is not the financing mechanism that we feel is fair."

Mr. President, repeal of this legislation is not a hasty retreat. It is a reexamination of the priorities of our health care policies. It is an opportunity to start with a clean slate, to discuss and consider what our senior citizens really want, insurance for long-term nursing home care and skilled nursing in-home care.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to pass the Danforth-Roth amendment and repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. McCAIN. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, a debate which pits the Senator from Texas on the opposite side from the Senator from New Hampshire is as entertaining as it is rare. Most people think that they are a single individual named "Gramm Rudman." The debate is a rather narrow one. The debate is over which position is most likely to settle this issue.

The Senator from Texas believes that we had better pass exactly the same proposition that the House passsed a couple of days ago, or we will lose our goal in a conference committee. The Senator from New Hampshire, I believe, has a sounder set of reasons. He points out, as I do, that 2 years ago when President Reagan recommended that we provide care for those who suffer catastrophic illnesses and are hospitalized for extended periods of time, we were providing care for which there was a very real need in our society, and care which could be provided at a reasonable cost spread across all Medicare beneficiaries.

The truth of that proposition is as clear today as it was 2 years ago. It has been obscured only by the add-ons over and above what the President originally reached. The McCain bill will get rid of the add-ons, but will leave the core, which we need.

If we repeal the entire bill, this issue is not over, Mr. President. We will simply be back in another 6 months or another year attempting to provide that catastrophic care once again, and subject to the risk once again of having a Christmas tree addition of benefits to it.

If we truly wish to settle this issue now both well and fairly to all concerned, we will vote this amendment down and vote for the McCain bill and simply show our confidence, by a very large vote, that a majority of 6 to 1 in the House of Representatives, and what I suspect will be at least as large a majority for the McCain bill, if we are able to vote on it on final passage, will in fact be carried out by our conferees. If it is not, we should reject the conference. Let us do this right and justly and vote with Senator McCAIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time.

Mr. McCAIN. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. COATS. I rise in support of the Roth-Danforth repeal amendment, but I also want to commend my colleague from Arizona for the time and effort and work he has put into fashioning a sensible, I think, approach to the problem. In fact, it very much parallels the measure that I introduced in the Senate several months ago, S. 1174, in terms of eliminating those unwanted future benefits and eliminating the surtax, but retaining the core provisions already in place.

I carried that proposal to seniors all across the State of Indiana. I visited personally with more than 1,000. My staff visited personally with more than 2,500, explaining the provisions of my bill, and I received tens of thousands of letters from seniors, and their response to my proposal, which was very similar to Senator McCAINS's was, "We are confused; it is not enough. Repeal the thing, go back to zero and start over."

It is for that reason that I have stood here to support the Roth-Danforth repeal bill. I have heard their message. Their message has been very clear. I think the very best and most sensible way we can approach this is to support the Danforth-Roth amendment, repeal this provision and go back and then examine what benefits we need to look at to protect seniors.

One last point: All of us should remember that the Roth-Danforth amendment does retain some very essential provisions. It retains the spousal improverishment and those Medicaid changes that reduce infant mortality by providing assistance to low-income women and children under the age of 1.

It also retains the Medicare buy-in provision for the States. So it is not as if we are totally walking away from some of the necessary things we did when we passed this bill in the first place. I am going to support this amendment. If it fails, and I hope it does not, I will of course support the measure from my friend from Arizona.

For the past 9 months, I have met with literally thousands of Hoosier seniors about the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act in town meetings and senior forums. My staff has held many additional seminars that were attended by more than 2,500 senior citizens. At least 15,000 Medicare beneficiaries have written or called my office since the beginning of the year to discuss the catastrophic law. It is all they wanted to talk about. And the overwhelming message they have given me is: Please repeal this law and start all over again.

Almost before the ink dried on the catastrophic law, questions were raised about the projected costs and the wisdom of a number of the benefits. Based on my judgment about what a modestly priced package of benefits to give the elderly piece of mind protection from the catastrophic costs of an acute illness or injury and feedback from seniors, I introduced S. 1174 on June 14 in an effort to repair this flawed law. The thrust of that bill was to return the law to what it was originally intended to do: Take care of the basic acute care needs of the elderly at an affordable price. As of last summer, cost estimates of the catastrophic law began to rise, and the projected surplus began to fall. S. 1174, like the Roth-Danforth amendment, would have cut the size of the catastrophic law considerably and kept it budget neutral.

I can tell you that most of the Hoosiers I have talked with about the catastrophic law are confused and frightened by it. It changed so many times before it became law that even seniors who have studied it carefully are unsure of its provisions. One thing they do know is that this law burdens millions of seniors with a tax increase. Whatever strained credibility the surtax may have had when the bill became law has been destroyed by two critical facts: The law is much more expensive than originally thought, and the very group this law was supposed to benefit has made it clear they want no part of it.

Although some people in Washington may have been surprised to learn that the estimated cost has now ballooned to almost $49 billion from $30.8 billion as of last year, I can tell you that this news came as no surprise to Hoosier seniors. The more they learned about the catastrophic law the less they liked it.

I am not aware of any Medicare Program that has come close to meeting projected costs since this system was launched in 1965. The overruns are legendary. Common sense tells me that when the estimated costs of the program have risen 59 percent in just 1 year, there is little hope that the present law will not be severely in the red in the near future. This means that even with the taxes that seniors are paying, somebody will be left holding the bag. Based on experience, that somebody will be all taxpayers, including the elderly.

Another facet of the catastrophic law that angers Medicare beneficiaries is that many of them have duplicate coverage. It infuriates them to be forced to pay for benefits they are already receiving. According to the Congressional Research Service, 29 percent of noninstitutionalized Medicare beneficiaries have at least some health insurance coverage from a former or present employer. Although these seniors are fortunate to have medical benefits, they are still hard pressed to pay an additional tax for coverage they do not need.

S. 1174 eliminates those concerns by abolishing the surtax and offering a package of core acute care benefits similar to the Roth-Danforth plan. My bill was written based on what was known about the catastrophic law last summer. Since that time, however a lot more unpleasant information about the law has come to light, especially the escalation of costs I mentioned earlier. Because of this new information, and the widespread confusion about the catastrophic law among the elderly, I decided to cosponsor the Roth-Danforth plan. I believe we will best serve the interests of our seniors if we wipe the slate clean with the Roth-Danforth plan and start all over again.

The Roth-Danforth amendment is a compassionate repeal because it eliminates the surtax and all the provisions of the catastrophic law that have not yet gone into effect and it retains the benefits that have come on line this year. The intent is to ensure that no Medicare beneficiary will be forced out of a hospital room or nursing home bed due to repeal. These sections will remain in force until January 1, 1991.

This amendment also permanently retains three very important parts of the catastrophic law that relate to Medicaid. The critical protection against spousal impoverishment will remain in effect. This benefit will allow beneficiaries in a nursing home to qualify for Medicaid coverage without impoverishing their spouse. This will give spouses who are staying at home and doing their best to care for their mate a much deserved sense of dignity as well as more financial resources.

In addition, the Roth-Danforth amendment keeps the Medicare buy-in section that requires States to pay the Medicare premiums of the poorest elderly. This year the buy-in applies to those at 85 percent of the poverty level. That rate gradually increases to 100 percent of the poverty level by 1992. Finally, it retains the provision that is designed to reduce infant mortality by increasing access to Medicaid for low-income pregnant women and children under the age of one.

The Roth-Danforth amendment is the right way to repeal the catastrophic law because it eliminates the undesirable features of the present law. Like the bill I introduced last summer, S. 1174; it abolishes the surtax and retains the hospitalization and spousal impoverishment protection benefits. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, this is a very critical vote, and it is one which the House of Representatives took earlier this week where, by a very substantial vote, they rolled up the entire rug of protections contained in the Catastrophic Coverage Act and put it in permanent cold storage.

I think it is critical for our debate here today to recognize exactly what will be lost if the pending amendment succeeds. Anyone who votes for this amendment is voting against the McCain amendment and anyone who votes against the McCain amendment is voting against the one piece of legislation that the elderly want, the one piece of legislation which is fiscally responsible, and the one piece of legislation which as good health policy and keeps the antispousal impoverishment protections and the home health care benefits that are the core of a good long-term care policy in this country.

If we let the rug be totally rolled up and be put into cold storage, we will sacrifice millions of patients and their families to the financial jaws of long-term hospitalization; we will withdraw life-enhancing family support in home health benefits and respite care; and, if this amendment prevails and the McCain amendment is repealed or defeated, we will send a message to thousands of terminally ill Americans that Congress now devalues the dignities and comfort of hospice care.

Mr. President, I will vote against this amendment, which repeals everything. I urge my colleagues to do the same so that we may preserve benefits that are valuable, that are responsible, that are badly needed, and which create a platform of long-term care protections on which we may build in the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I rise tonight to support the amendment to repeal. I was one of the first last year to laud the passage of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. However, a lot of us found out over the last 15 months that we come to learn that the catastrophic bill is seriously flawed and beyond repair.

I welcomed passage of the catastrophic bill as a long overdue expansion of the Medicare Program and an important first step in addressing the pressing health care needs of the Nation's elderly. However, this first step took us down the wrong path, and now we need to take a step back—back to the drawing board. Only repeal will allow us a fresh start. We need to listen to what the elderly want, instead of telling them what they need.

There is a high price tag attached to growing old in this country. The costs of hospital care, prescription drugs, home health care, preventive care and long-term care all add up to bills that push many seniors into poverty. The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 was designed to protect our Nation's seniors from some of the devastating costs associated with a serious illness. And yet it is those very same citizens who realize that the high cost of the bill to its beneficiaries poses an equally great financial threat to their fixed incomes.

Mr. President, I believe that senior citizens want repeal. Today, I feel that no other alternative will satisfy the seniors in my State of Alabama. Congress must admit, as I do, that we made a mistake and vote to repeal the Act. I hope that my colleagues here will join in the repeal when we vote later.

Over the first half of this year, I traveled extensively throughout Alabama, holding town meetings in all 67 counties of the State. I remember being surprised at the reaction of many seniors at these meetings—surprised to learn that they did not want the catastrophic bill and that they would be forced to pay for benefits that they already had. Mr. President, I don't blame senior citizens one bit for opposing a law that forces them to participate in a health care plan that they neither want nor need.

At each town meeting, senior after senior would stand up and express opposition to this legislation. And I know that my experience is not unique. I commend members of this body for working to try and reach a compromise. But my constituents do not want compromise, they want repeal.

I hope that we learn from our mistakes with the catastrophic bill. First, we must not give our seniors something that they do not want, and then require them to pay for it. Second, we should listen more carefully to our senior citizens—they want coverage for nursing home care and long-term illness.

Yesterday the House voted overwhelmingly to repeal the catastrophic coverage bill. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment and do the same tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I yield myself 8 to 10 minutes of the time remaining to me as manager of the bill on my time with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 10 minutes, the time to be charged against the time allotted to the Senator on the bill.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the Chair.

I guess I would just want to implore my colleagues, Mr. President, to not throw this whole thing away and to vote against repeal.

It is really amazing to me to think that, after all of these months and months of consideration, we come down to a decision as to whether we are going to flat-out repeal and say "no" to benefits for millions of Americans who are older, frail, unhealthy, and poor and who do not have health insurance and have no way of recourse, and we are pretty much going to say, "We could not take the heat and we are afraid of how you are going to treat us politically. We know what you want. We know what your needs are."

We know that we are elected to come to the Congress to solve problems. We know that in solving those problems we have to make tough decisions. Some of the toughest of those decisions is when you come to anything that has to do with health care because it is growing so fast. But then again so are senior citizens growing in numbers very fast, and they are growing older and they are growing more frail. So now we come to this moment to decide whether to repeal catastrophic health care benefits of all kinds.

I find that remarkable; I find that sad. And I think we will have the courage as a body not to give into that temptation.

I go back to 3 years ago to experiences that we all had going around our States and also in the recent years listening to our seniors. What they were pleading for was something they did not have, which was help in times of absolute desperation.

Seniors would stand up at town meetings and they would say:

You know, I could get cancer; I could get struck down by some traumatic physical disability or injury, and then I have a choice and that is that I can either spend myself, or my spouse can spend himself or herself into poverty so we can qualify for Medicaid, or I am out in the cold. There is no other way. I go broke; I go flat broke.

That is not the America that I understand that we are; that is not the body on the Hill that I understand that we are. The President talks about a shining city on the top of a hill, and we are here about to yank several million of those people down to the bottom of the hill and dump them in the cesspool because we cannot take the heat; cannot take the political heat, which is what this is all about.

People have been talking about cost; people have been talking about all kinds of things. But it really comes down to that. Do we have the courage to stand up and take the heat, to vote for something which we know in our hearts is good health policy, which we know that our seniors want?

We know that we failed in our communication to them about the implications of what it was that we passed in the original catastrophic bill, and then we pare that back and back and back. And now we are faced with the decision of whether to give them nothing, or at least something that they can hold onto.

There are 9 million seniors in this country who live alone. In West Virginia, they live in deep valleys or on the tops of mountains, but they live alone. Their families have dispersed, and they do not have that famed nuclear family to take care of them. The children are gone in my part of the country, maybe because they could not find work, and they are gone. So there is the mother or the farther by himself or herself alone at the top of a mountain with no help. So now we decided, are we going to strip them of hope or are we going to give them something that they can hold onto?

I know and every Member of this body knows that there are 10 million Americans who have absolutely no Medigap insurance at all. I know and this body knows that almost 27 percent of our senior citizens have no private supplemental insurance, and they are over 75 years old, and that 25 percent of them live in poverty. Poverty for a single senior is a sorry condition to behold.

The figures say 25 percent of those are not in good health. I would suggest it would be a lot more than that. A lot of it is in the mind. People live by themselves or maybe they live as a couple, but they are afraid of a medical catastrophe. It is not whether or not they get one—that is a true catastrophe—but they are afraid of getting one.

The proposition we have before us now is that we are going to take all hope away from those people and we will be able to go home and say, well, we voted against the supplemental premium or something else that you did not like, and just drop these people into the ditch.

Mr. President, I am not prepared to do that. I am not prepared to do that for the people of my State of West Virginia.

My State is not a wealthy State. My people are not wealthy people. We need help. We have time and we have a bill that yet remains that will give help.

I think of the work we have yet to do, Mr. President, in health—and I spoke about this earlier in the day—here we are fretting, traumatized, turned upside down by something called catastrophic health care, which is a very simple concept is it not? I mean, a medical catastrophe is a pretty easy thing to understand. You get cancer, you get Alzheimer's you get hit by a truck, you get crippled. It is a pretty easy thing to understand. You give those people help. This is America. No other country in the free world does what we now do, which is not give those people some kind of help. Yes, we ask them to pay part of it. We pay part of it. Others pay part of it. But we never deny them the help, because this is America. Except, of course, that we have been and we do deny them help.

Long-term care, $40 to $60 billion. What kind of heat is that going to generate? Thirty-seven million uninsured Americans, more than one-quarter of them children. Two weeks ago I was in Cook County, Chicago, and I, along with a number of others, including Senator COATS, of Indiana, viewed 1-pound babies, 1½-pound babies, low birth weight because the mothers were on cocaine or they did not know anything about prenatal care. The figures of the children were a terrible thing to behold. The children could get out of the intensive care unit, Mr. President, but it will cost to $50,000 to $100,000 to $150,000 to $200,000 just while they are in there. But when they get out, if they get out, they are going to be developmentally disabled, intellectually disabled. They will have problems all their lives. I mean, we are either going to decide that we are going to attack problems and solve problems in this country or we are going to pay a mammoth cost.

I am of the opinion that health care and the cost of health care and the nature of health care and the morality surrounding health care and our obligation as a body toward health care is the most massive problem this country faces, other than the scourage of drugs.

We are going to have to do it, Mr. President. We are going to have to face up to these problems sooner or later. If we go with repeal now, what we will be doing is we will simply be stepping back and saying, "I cannot take the heat; I do not want to face the problems," and we will not. There is a Pepper Commission. The Pepper Commission will consider solutions, and we will give solutions on long-term care and the uninsured.

I yield myself 3 more minutes.

Mr. DANFORTH. Parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DANFORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the time for the inquiry not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may state his inquiry.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, as I understand the situation now, it is a doubling-up against the amendment. In other words, both sides who are controlling the time on the bill are opposed to the Roth-Danforth amendment, and therefore what they are doing is yielding themselves virtually—how much more time do they have on the bill?

Mr. MCCAIN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DANFORTH. Yes.

Mr. MCCAIN. I just agreed to yield 6 minutes of my time on the bill to the Senator from Delaware because he has an additional speaker.

Mr. DANFORTH. That I very much appreciate. But Senator DOLE has already taken 3 minutes on the bill to oppose this amendment. Senator ROCKEFELLER has already taken 10 minutes on the bill to oppose this amendment. And it is going to go on how much longer?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. About 3 minutes.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I would simply say I really do not think that is fair debate. I appreciate the generosity of the Senator from Arizona yielding us 6 minutes. We are still about 7 minutes behind. The Senator from West Virginia is going on for 3 more minutes and is controlling an additional 7 minutes, as I understand it.

So I simply raise the point that I think in fairness we should even out the time on this particular amendment and not have a substantially greater amount of time used up by the opponents of the amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from West Virginia is well within his rights in the course that he is pursuing. If the Senator from West Virginia is not within his rights, I would, of course, be willing to be instructed by the Parliamentarian or the Chair.

Mr. DANFORTH. I have stated a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will answer the Senator's parliamentary inquiry. The Senator who is controlling time on the bill has the right to use that time on the bill at such point as he may wish during the course of the debate and has done so. It is my understanding that Senator MCCAIN has stated he has yielded some portion of his time to Senator ROTH on the amendment, to be used as Senator ROTH may wish. Senator ROTH is controlling the time on the amendment on his particular side. But Senator ROCKEFELLER received appropriate recognition and is entitled to use the remainder of his time, if he wishes, on the bill, but he could not then, of course, speak on the bill itself in the event this amendment fails.

Mr. DANFORTH. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor, and his time has just expired for the first 10 minutes that he requested. Does the Senator request a further extension of that time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The Chair is correct; for 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the Chair very much. I will close, Mr. President, with only two thoughts, and that is the work that lies before us will be tested in terms of how we make the decision on the repeal motion before us. If we repeal, we are signaling to seniors all over this country that we do not have the courage, the leadership, the vision, quite frankly, the guts to face up to the problem. We are a problem-solving body.

It comes down to me, I guess, to some folks in South Charleston, WV. Howard Murphy, his wife Sybil has Alzheimer's disease. And Howard for many years has been caring for her. He has no help. He is exhausted emotionally, physically, psychologically. He is in great pain. You watch him touch his wife, who barely responds. He is on duty 24 hours a day. He has to feed her. There is no help for him. And we simply, as a society, have to deal with that kind of a problem, Mr. President.

If we say we are going to repeal all of catastrophic health care, I think we make a mistake of the most extraordinary dimensions and tragic dimensions, not just for the catastrophic health bill which is before us, but for the whole future in terms of our institutional courage to face up to some extremely expensive and difficult problems that face older Americans and younger Americans, problems that are not going to go away.

I hope that my colleagues will vote on both sides of the aisle against this amendment and that we will not repeal catastrophic health care.

I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from West Virginia at this point has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. MACK. I thank the Senator for yielding. What I believe is the core argument against repeal is that, in essence, there is going to be a backlash. There are going to be many who are going to come out and say we have taken away coverage.

Let me try to put that in perspective. I have used these statistics in the past but I want to say it one more time. Basically 90 percent of the retirees of this Nation have some form of coverage against catastrophic illness. Ten percent of the wealthiest of the Nation have sufficient assets to take care of it. The next 70 percent have some form of Medigap insurance. The next 10 percent have no coverage. The lowest 10 percent are covered by Medicaid.

Therefore, we ought to be focusing our attention on the 10 percent. Not developing an entire program to include 100 percent of the retirees. I received 115,000 pieces of mail from my State. I have gone to town meetings. I have listened to the seniors. They say they do not want this.

They are more afraid of us and what we are going to do and what Government is going to do to them than they are concerned about catastrophic coverage. They have already protected themselves.

It is time for us to repeal this act. It is time for us to listen to what they say. They are concerned about government eating up their only protection long term and that is what they have worked for, what they have set aside to protect themselves.

We see inflation eating away at their purchasing power. We see higher taxes, property taxes. We see some of them still working and they are paying payroll taxes and Social Security taxes and they are paying taxes on 50 percent of the Social Security that they are earning.

Now with the catastrophic presently in existence they are paying another $4.80 for monthly premiums, which is going to go up. They are also subject to a surtax.

It is time to reapeal this. It is time to listen to the seniors of this Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, first I would like to say as our colleagues have earlier tonight, how much I appreciate the work that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. McCAIN] has done on this legislation. Without his persistence, without his determination to get this issue considered, to get it to the floor of the Senate, it would not be here tonight. So I commend him and give full recognition to him, that he deserves. We could not get action from the committee. But because of his persistence we are here tonight and I certainly appreciate that.

It is very unusual when I am not on the same side of a particular issue as my coleague who just spoke from Florida. I have the highest regard for him and his awareness of the needs of senior citizens. But tonight I feel it is important we go back and reflect on how we got here.

As a Member of the other body in the previous Congress, I remember how this discussion began. We had a noble goal, one that certainly is still very applicable here tonight. We were looking for a way to provide some assistance to those few elderly who had long-term acute illnesses who could lose everything they had and would have no place to turn.

Obviously, it went too far. We expanded it way beyond just a few poor elderly. We got into prescription drugs and it grew and it grew. It got out of control. But it was not the concept that was wrong. The concept is still right.

Now we are about to go to the other extreme. We went too far last year. Now I think we are about to go too far here tonight. If we completely repeal this catastrophic health insurance coverage, then I think we will have thrown the baby out with the bath water.

When I go back to my State of Mississippi, what I hear from my constituents, from the elderly is they want the surtax repealed. But instead of just repealing the surtax and the prescription drugs, some of the things that went too far, we are talking about repealing everything.

If it were not for the McCain approach tonight, I would be for absolute total repeal. But Senator McCAIN, in his proposal here, has got it in the right perspective. It does repeal the surtax. It would not allow the additional costs for prescription drugs and other parts of this legislation to stay in existence or go into effect. It would provide those basic things that we do need, the long-term hospital care, spousal improverishment. Those provisions would still be there, with a very small premium.

So I urge my colleagues tonight not to completely kill the catastrophic health insurance legislation that we passed last year. It will not go away.

If we kill it now, the people who need this help will be back and they will be asking for help, and we will try to find a way to do it; maybe not this year but next year. I think the thing to do is go with what we originally intended, which is basically what Senator McCAIN has in his proposal. I urge the Senate to defeat outright repeal and pass the McCain approach.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, contrary to the opinion of the Senator from Mississippi, if we repeal the catastrophic health insurance bill we have not thrown out the baby with the bath. We have saved the baby and we have given the baby the opportunity to mature and live a healthy life.

The issue of health insurance for our senior citizens is not going to go away, no matter what we do with this legislation. We are going to be doing something. There is absolutely no doubt about that.

There is only one reason to vote for the McCain amendment. There is only one reason to vote against repeal. The reason to vote against repeal is that my colleagues believe the McCain legislation is the way to go in catastrophic health insurance. That is the reason to vote against repeal.

If my colleagues vote for repeal, we save the issue. If my colleagues vote for repeal, they vote to consider this matter again. And we will consider it again. But if we vote against repeal we, in effect, vote for the McCain proposition. We say, through our vote, that the McCain plan is the plan we want for catastrophic insurance.

Mr. President, today we have voted five different times to reject various plans for health insurance. Five different plans have gone down by substantial margins in votes today.

I ask the Senators who support catastrophic health insurance, the Senate, having voted against five different plans, why do you want to enact into law the McCain plan? Why do you believe that the McCain plan is the best one for this country? Would it not be better to reopen this proposition? Would it not be better to reconsider where we are going with health care for our senior citizens?

There are Members of the Senate, and particularly members of the Finance Committee, who have fought long and hard for a cap on part B coverage. The McCain plan has nothing about a cap on part B coverage.

There are Members of the Senate who have fought long and hard for a drug component to a catastrophic bill. The Senator from Rhode Island is one. Why do we want tonight to write into law a plan that does not have the drug proposal?

Mr. President, the McCain proposition has nothing for skilled nursing homes. There are Members of the Senate who believe a skilled nursing home component is essential to a catastrophic plan. Why do we want to enact into law a program that has no space for skilled nursing homes?

The McCain proposition is a specific plan. Some people believe in that plan. Others do not. And the point that I have been making all along with respect to repeal is not that it ends a health care program, not that it ends the idea of catastrophic care, but it holds the question open.

The Pepper Commission is going to report next spring on long-term care for the elderly and on the problem of 31 million Americans who have no health insurance at all. Why should we prejudge the decision on the Pepper Commission by committing our limited resources now to the McCain plan?

So, Mr. President, again the question is whether the McCain plan is precisely what we want for catastrophic health insurance. This issue is not over. This issue is not going away. We are not deciding, as Senator ROCKEFELLER suggested, in some insensitive way, to forget about the elderly. This issue is going to be with us over and over again. But why write into law a plan that we are not sure of? Is this not a rerun of what we did in 1988?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent to allow 6 minutes of my time from the bill to be given to Senator ROTH who is a proponent of the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, the Senate today faces the daunting task of sorting through a bewildering array of proposals to reform the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Program. I sincerely regret that many of these options appear to have been hastily cobbled together in the last few weeks, days, or even hours. Given such haste, I fear for our ability to adequately address this extraordinarily complex and controversial issue.

But address it we must. The firestorm of public criticism that has accompanied this legislation from the beginning has now reached a fever pitch, and can be ignored no longer. On Wednesday, the House voted overwhelmingly in favor of a near-total repeal. Today, we in the Senate must decide whether to follow suit or to pursue a different approach.

Of the options proposed, the most prudent seems to me to be the Medicare Catastrophic Reform Act, introduced earlier this week by my friend and colleague, Senator MCCAIN. The chief advantage of this approach is that it would repeal the controversial supplemental premium, while at the same time preserving a substantial portion of the program's benefits.

The McCain proposal would retain all portions of the current catastrophic law except for the very expensive prescription drug, skilled nursing, and part B copayment benefits. Among those benefits which would remain in place are long-term hospitalization coverage and spousal impoverishment protection, as well as home health, hospice, and respite care reimbursement. The McCain bill would be funded entirely by the flat part B premium increase now in effect. This premium amount will total $4.80 per month next year.

Mr. President, I voted against the original catastrophic legislation because I did not believe it adequately addressed what I consider to be the most pressing health care need of our elderly—namely long-term nursing home and home health care. I feared that by asking America's seniors to pay the high supplemental premiums necessary to finance acute, "catastrophic" care, Congress risked foreclosing opportunities to finance more comprehensive services, such as nursing home care, which can literally wipe out a family's life savings.

Senator MCCAIN's proposal would remove these high premiums and significantly scale back the scope of the program. It is my sincere hope that doing so will give Congress an opportunity to refocus its attention on long-term health care protection for America's elderly. Until we put the paralyzing controversy of catastrophic health insurance behind us, this urgent need will remain unmet.

Although reform of this deeply flawed legislation is certainly overdue, I would caution against succumbing to the temptation of full repeal. One can argue quite convincingly—as the Senator from Missouri has done—that we ought to "wipe the slate clean" and start over. This argument has a certain tidy simplicity to it, and I can certainly understand why so many of our constituents have endorsed it.

Nevertheless, I question both the wisdom and the fairness of completely dismantling a major entitlement program only 1 year after enactment. Millions of senior citizens and thousands of health care providers have come to expect and depend on the catastrophic program. As we seek ways of reforming this coverage, we must take care to do it responsibly.

The part B monthly premium increase included in the current law is more than adequate to finance a significant portion of the currently envisioned catastrophic benefits. This premium increase is neither large nor controversial. I agree with the Senator from Arizona that we ought to retain this premium, as well as the considerable benefits it is capable of funding.

As we are all aware, one thorny obstacle standing in the way of catastrophic reform efforts has been the problem of the Gramm-Rudman deficit targets. Ironically, because of the way the catastrophic health insurance program has been "front-loaded" to ensure adequate reserves in later years, any move to delay the program now would increase next year's deficit figure by several billion dollars. At this point, such an increase would probably push the Federal deficit past the $110-billion deficit target required by Gramm-Rudman for 1990. If this happens, Congress runs the risk of triggering an automatic across-the-board cut, or "sequester."

This poses a difficult challenge, but I firmly believe that a solution can and must be found. In my view, it is simply unfair for Congress to hold the Nation's senior citizens responsible for its own lack of fiscal discipline. It is for this reason that I voted earlier this afternoon to waive the Budget Act on this issue.

If, in fact, we believe the catastrophic program ought to be delayed—or even repealed—we should go ahead and legislate that change. Gramm-Rudman deficit rules are meant to be guides to help Congress control deficit spending. They are not holy writ—and if we begin treating them as such, we run the risk of becoming a prisoner of our own procedures.

Mr. President, it was 2 years ago this month that the Senate passed its initial version of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. It is my hope that we will mark this anniversary by responsibly correcting the mistake we have made. I intend to support Senator MCCAIN's reform proposal, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). The Senator from Florida is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President. I appreciate my colleague yielding me time. We have heard tonight a different description of what we have been hearing. I suggest that we are all listening to our own special drummer in terms of what message we have received on this issue.

I would like to comment on some of the things that I am hearing. I am hearing people who are distressed about what they see as a fundamental unfairness in the method of financing this program; people who made preparations throughout a substantial period of their lives for exactly these eventualities and are now being told that they acted in a foolish and imprudent way because they are going to have to pay a second time; that their previous efforts at providing for their own well-being were essentially for naught.

I have heard people saying today about the proposal that will be before us, should this amendment not be adopted, that we are engaged in a governmental bait-and-switch plan. Yes, there were many people who said they wanted to have the surtax repealed, but they did not follow that by saying "and we want to have the benefits reduced."

What we are going to have before us, if we do not adopt this amendment, is for most Americans who are covered by this program the obligation that they continue to pay the same or a greater amount of their income in the form of monthly payments but have a reduction in the benefits which they would receive. I believe that we are going to hear an increasing uproar as people realize that they have been induced into a program under one set of assumptions and now are seeing their benefits substantially reduced.

I am also hearing that for the first time we are asking of a social program that only those people who benefit will pay for that program. It is not surprising that we have had an outcry. I suggest that if we were to ask the kindergarten children of America to be the only ones to pay to support kindergartens that we would have, in their small voices, a similar outcry.

I believe that for all of those funding reasons, we need to go back to base one and reevaluate how we are going to finance our Nation's program of social and health benefits for older Americans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ROTH. I yield the Senator 1 more minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 1 additional minute.

Mr. GRAHAM. I also would like to comment on what I am hearing in terms of what the real desires of our older citizens are, the fastest-growing decadal group of Americans, those Americans over the age of 85. In my State, we have almost 2 percent of our population over 85. What that population and those who look forward to the day when they will be over 85 are asking for is a program of dignified, respectful, and affordable long-term care to respond to the new realities of the aging process as they are impacting larger and larger numbers of our people. That, I say to my colleagues, is where we need to be directing our attention as we return to a reexamination of what our priorities should be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. McCAIN. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, one of the proponents for repeal, the Senator from Texas, said do not send catastrophic back to the people, bring it to us; the implication being the people in the Finance Committee. Another one of the proponents on the Finance Committee said let us wait for the Pepper Commission. I have news for you. We are one in the same. No matter how you go, the folks who are standing up here today, with the exception of the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Delaware, at least some of us are the folks who helped create this sort of thing. Yet the way I think the system works around here is that we also are the folks who have to help repair it.

The big question is have we learned anything out of this whole process? I suggest to everybody here that what the Senator from Mississippi said about the concept is accurate. Concept was a good one; concept of catastrophic; the concept of skilled nursing facility and home health benefits and respite care for the long-term care of the elderly. That is good, too. Prescription drug benefits appropriately constructed, that is good too.

Our problem is we did too much all at once, and we decided we were going to charge them for it. It is not going to work. I am up here to say I guess that is a lesson I have learned and I trust a lot of our colleagues have learned.

I would like to take the McCain amendment to some conference. I do not know whether I would be on it or not. But the folks who gave it to you will be. I think taking the McCain amendment to that kind of conference and building on the Pepper Commission recommendations, whatever they may be, is going to be helpful.

The last encouraging sign I share with you is that I heard what the Senators from Florida said about Floridians. I would like for you to have heard what the Senators from North Dakota and South Dakota said about their constituents; very different kind of people we are listening to. Those people want catastrophic coverage. Those people in North and South Dakota are going without any insurance at all. Those are the kind of people who need some kind of catastrophic bill, and I suspect some of them may pay for it. I do not know who ended up in Florida other than the folks who started there or in Arizona, but that is one of the problems we need to deal with in this country as we come to grips with this issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Minnesota has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I think we can all agree that the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act has become something more than we bargained for. The rising cost estimates make it virtually impossible for us to make an educated decision and, rather than take a wild stab at a catastrophic insurance program, we should stop and take a good look at what we are doing.

When the law passed last year, it constituted the single largest expansion of a Federal social program since Medicare was created in 1965, and now the cost has far exceeded original expectations of $30 billion.

I do believe this law provides true catastrophic insurance, in fact it is far removed from the original intent that President Reagan discussed back in 1986. Catastrophic insurance should protect everyone, not just the elderly, from financial ruin due to a catastrophic illness.

I remember discussing this issue on the Senate floor back in October 1987. I expressed several concerns as to what the projections were for future years. Specifically, I questioned whether this bill would open up incentives to pour more benefits into catastrophic costs. I questioned whether this would ultimately lead to cost controls and rationing of the available medical products to the beneficiaries.

At that time, I questioned my colleagues as to where we would end up in 10 to 15 years, concerned that we would have more Federal involvement and the Federal Government paying for medical programs that it cannot afford. I was concerned as to what this would do to the Federal budget.

I voted against this law, and as I stated then, it was not because I was unconcerned about the problems many Americans face with catastrophic illness. It was because we had no idea what this program would become in 5 years. And now, the cost estimates are staggering.

Obviously, as I am sure most of the Members of this body can agree, we made a mistake with this supplemental premium. Let us admit our mistake, repeal it, and look at preparing a true catastrophic insurance program.

Mr. President, I would like to express my support for the efforts of my colleagues. Senator McCAIN has labored over this issue to find a solution to the catastrophic problem. His amendment, which I cosponsored, repeals the burdensome surtax on our senior citizens.

Senators ROTH and DANFORTH, my colleagues on the Finance Committee, have a proposal for full repeal. As 1 of the only 11 Senators who voted against the Catastrophic Act, I have always supported full repeal.

During the debate in October 1987 Senator WALLOP introduced an amendment to make the act voluntary—not tied to part B. I support this measure as well, allowing the seniors to choose whether they want the coverage, rather than having it forced on them by Congress.

Any of these proposals, if adopted, would be preferable to the current law and I would encourage my colleagues to support any one of them.

Mr. President, may we have learned from this experience of the passing of this catastrophy of cost, confusion, and coercion that ultimately the best medicine for our people may just be for the Members of Congress to stop the remedies, stop the remedies, of Government inteference.

Mr. President, I have always believed that in terms of adding more government intervention that we should be moderate.

Mr. President, the history of the last year and previous years tells us that this body is liberal in its willingness to use the force of government to dictate the affairs of our people.

Mr. President, during the past years that I have been interested in politics. I have repeatedly said stop the government remedies; stop trying to interfere with people; leave them alone.

Mr. President, medical services are like all scarce resources, there are only two ways to allocate them: One is by the whips and guns of government; the other by the volunteer action of free people through free institutions.

Mr. President, history shows us that the more people respect private ownership and the rule of law, the better the standard of living and the more respect for human rights people enjoy.

Mr. President, this brings me to conclude that my vote of 1 year ago against this bill was correct, if this fails. I support my respected friend, Senator MCCAIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Idaho has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. CHAFEE] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would like to say this about the McCain package. Does it include everything we all want? No. We varied from it. Some have wanted prescription drugs. Some have wanted the part B premium with a cap on it. But the McCain package, nonetheless, has a lot of virtue to it, and it is worthwhile supporting because it does cover the hospital care and, furthermore, it has many preventive medicine aspects to it.

I would refer to the mammography portion of it, plus the Mitchell drugs, and the hospital care. But the point I should like to make is this, Mr. President. The suggestion is that somehow, if we repeal this act and step back, as Paul on the road to Damascus, we will be struck by a bolt of lightning and come up with a health care program that is accessible, it is rational, it is first rate in every respect, including economical.

Mr. President, those of us in the Finance Committee have wrestled with this problem, and so has the whole Nation. There has been conference after conference held in every section of our Nation dealing with how to obtain good health care for our citizens. There is no agreement. So there is not going to be any great magic solution somehow appear from the Pepper Commission. The Pepper Commission may be fine, but they are not going to solve these problems for us.

Thus, Mr. President, I think it is important we take this step. It is not irretrievable. It is not that we cannot retreat from it. It is a modest step, but it will achieve significant benefits for a portion of our population that deserves and needs this type of assistance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I yield myself whatever time I need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, almost 10 hours ago in my opening remarks I stated that I felt we were on the verge of something very unusual in the history of this body, that is, that we were going to either dramatically restructure or repeal a major benefit program which was passed by the Congress of the United States just a little over a year ago.

That is, indeed, the first time a major program has been affected that way.

We are now on the verge of ending this long day. We have disposed of most of the amendments. We have had very spirited debate throughout the day. I urge my colleagues before we reach final passage, either up or down, to remember that we are indeed a Judeo-Christian nation and that this Nation is founded on principles that we do everything we can to help those who are less fortunate.

I believe an outright repeal of this bill would be a serious amendment and in some respects, with all due respect to the proponents of this amendment, an abrogation of some of our responsibilities to the poor and the elderly in our society.

What I would like to do is retain blood deductible, home health, respite, mammograms, Mitchell drugs, hospice, long-term hospitalization and spousal impoverishment.

Mr. President, we can do that with $4.90 per month on Medicare part B. Yes, the costs are going to go up. Yes, there may be some increases over time in the cost of these programs even though the most expensive of those programs have been eliminated. But let us for a very modest sum give these people protection as they reach their declining years that they both want and deserve. Let us remove those that they have found too expensive and indeed in some cases unwanted or unneeded.

I appreciate the point of view of Senator DANFORTH and Senator ROTH. They make very strong and compelling arguments. I suggest at this point in time it would be far better to retain what we have and what we can have and address and move forward together in addressing the concerns of seniors in this country and that is the issue of long-term care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time controlled by the Senator from Arizona has expired.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I am voting against total repeal because I believe that the best option is the McCain bill. If I voted for repeal, I would be undermining several key principles outlined in my earlier statement.

Both options address the main concern of the majority of senior citizens which is repeal of the surtax. However, total repeal also takes away valuable benefits which seniors are already receiving—it rips the rug out from under them—and I do not think that is wise.

As I said earlier, the McCain proposal retains the benefits that have already been implemented and retains some of the most meritorious benefits. It is good health care policy to retain those benefits and pay for them with the part B premium paid by the beneficiaries.

If repeal passes over McCain, then I will support repeal. I believe repeal is clearly preferable to leaving the program as is.

I wanted to clarify my position given the parliamentary situation we are facing here today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware controls 3 minutes and 20 seconds.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I want to emphasize that Roth-Danforth is, of course, our only opportunity to vote for repeal and to accomplish repeal by keeping it out of conference.

I agree with the comment made earlier that that is critically important if we do not want the same individuals who created the problem we have now to do it once again.

To those who say that cannot happen, let me say I remember 2 or 3 years ago being a conferee in conference with the House Ways and Means Committee and we yielded to their position. The House refused to accept our yielding to their position. So I think that is proof you cannot be certain what would happen if this legislation ended up in conference once more.

Let me point out that Roth-Danforth does repeal the surtax and it does repeal the catastrophic care benefits, but it is also important to remember that it does keep the Medicaid provisions like spousal impoverishment. But what my amendment offers—and I think this is particularly important—is it offers us the opportunity to step back and take a careful look as to where we are again.

As I said earlier, we spend nearly 12 percent for health in this country—nearly twice as much as is currently spent in England. Yet, I think most of us would agree that while there are many fine attributes of our health policy, we have some very serious problems.

So that we should take this opportunity of revoking the legislation which has so infuriated our senior citizens and take a careful look as to what kind of policies they want and how can it be financed.

The one fact we have to keep in mind is that today we do not have adequate information as to what any of these programs, including those that would be covered by the McCain amendment, would cost. We have no information as to duplication, but we do know that nearly 18 million of the 36 million senior citizens have some kind of catastrophic coverage. It is important, before we move in this area, that we find out what that coverage is so that we can develop the kind of program that will serve the maximum number of people.

Mr. President, the American people have spoken. The House has listened. It listened by a vote of 360 to 66. I hope the Senate will do the same.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time for both sides has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the Roth-Danforth amendment.

Mr. ROTH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes from our time on the bill to Senator BYRD of West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The President pro tempore, Senator BYRD, is recognized for 3 minutes, the time being subtracted from the time of the Senator from West Virginia on the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I regret that the Senate has spent the entire day trying to eliminate or modify the catastrophic health law which the Congress passed with such fanfare and widespread support only a year ago. I am not in favor of repeal of catastrophic health coverage, and although I have indicated by my votes today that I am willing to look at alternative means of financing these benefits, the bottom line is that any modification of this program, much less repeal, will result in the loss of benefits to the elderly and will hurt many seniors in West Virginia.

I believe that repeal of this program would be a serious mistake. There are many in West Virginia who desperately need the hospital coverage, the drug benefit, and the physician coverage that this law provides. I, too, have heard from many in my State who want this program repealed. But I think there has been much misunderstanding and misinformation about this program. Perhaps we in Congress failed to explain it fully to our constituents and thus left them vulnerable to those who are intent on selling them on the belief that all seniors would pay the maximum surtax.

What is at issue here is the impact on my State of the loss of benefits from repeal or modification of this program. Contrary to what many think, the law we passed does include coverage for long-term care—and those provisions will be wiped out under repeal and under the McCain proposal.

Many—I would hazard a guess, most elderly—need coverage for prescription drugs. As our distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] pointed out earlier today, prescription drug coverage is the benefit seniors say they most want and is the benefit that is not available from private insurers.

Most of the proposals to salvage some benefits retain coverage for hospitals. That is good, because the elderly are hospitalized more often than other members of the population. But they also have to see doctors more often, too—and repeal would eliminate coverage for that. I think this is a shame.

Repeal would eliminate coverage for mammograms for elderly women—a benefit that could save lives by identifying breast cancer early. It would eliminate home health care—which is much cheaper than hospitalization—respite care, coverage for immunosuppressive drugs for transplant patients, the blood deductible, and expanded hospice coverage.

West Virginians need these benefits—perhaps even more than the elderly in other States. There are more elderly and more poor elderly in West Virginia than in virtually all other States in the Union. This is a sad day for the Congress and will be an even sadder day for this country's elderly when our work on this bill is done.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, we have arrived at the point where the Senate must now make a vote of conscience. We have, as of this moment, performed major surgery on what was a deeply flawed Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. We have eliminated the surtax on supplemental premiums. We have eliminated the most duplicative benefits. We have cut back where there were fears of inadequate controls on costs. What we are left with is the McCain amendment or, as the Danforth-Roth amendment proposes, complete repeal of every single benefit enacted last year. That includes not only the hospital catastrophic protection that most people want but the expressions of home health and respite care that we all know are needed and necessary. It would include the repeal of the anti-spousal impoverishment protections that will prevent the cruelest choices of all. That is what the Danforth-Roth amendment would do. The Danforth-Roth amendment will inflict unconscionable damage on Medicare beneficiaries and loved ones. And the only responsible principled choice of the Senate is to reject it.

Mr. President, even as we now debate the repeal of protections against acute medical costs for America's aged, this Chamber echoes with the voices that first spoke for their enactment. These voices are many. They are the voices of the elderly poor and low income and their families. They are the voices of every American family for whom a catastrophic illness can mean untenable choices of physical health or financial ruin, of institutional care or debilitating emotional stress and fatigue. They are the voices of the frail elderly who need often only modest support to avoid institutionalization and to keep their independence and dignity.

Over 2 years ago, Secretary of Health and Human Services, Dr. Otis Bowen, focused the public consciousness on the devastating potential of an acute long-term illness for our Nation's elderly. Medicare, for all the program pluses, left the beneficiary vulnerable if struck down by a so-called catastrophic hospital stay. Secretary Bowen rightfully recognized that the suffering associated with a catastrophic illness extended beyond the patient. Families also bore the emotional pain and too often broke under the financial burden.

The Secretary's 1986 report was the genesis of legislation that gave America's aged and their families a last full measure of security in a broad package of catastrophic coverage under Medicare.

Mr. President, earlier this week our colleagues in the House rolled up this rug of protections on the run and put it in permanent cold storage. It is critical for our debate today to recognize exactly what will be lost if the Senate concurs with that vote.

What will be lost is the McCain bill. What we will have is the one piece of legislation that the elderly want which is fiscally responsible, and which, as good health policy, keeps the antispousal impoverishment and home health benefits that are the hope of a desperately needed long-term care foundation. What is more, without the McCain bill, we will sacrifice millions of patients and their families to the financial jaws of long-term hospitalization. We will withdraw life-enhancing family supports in home health benefits and respite care. We will force millions of seniors to once more choose between necessary prescription drugs and paying for rent, food, or heat.

And if we vote total repeal, we send a message to thousands of terminally ill Americans that Congress now devalues the dignities and comfort of hospice care.

Completely repealing the Catastrophic Health Care Act means the best benefits in this program will be bagged, tagged, and deep-sixed. It means a lot of truly needy people will be driven into nursing homes prematurely for lack of services in the community or when a postponed surgery turns an acute illness into a chronic condition. And it means this body, Mr. President, supposedly elected to act for the public good, will have turned our backs on that responsibility.

Some of our colleagues say the program is so fatally flawed that repeal is the only means of reform. I think repeal instead of reform is a copout; we ditch the baby with the bath water rather than change the diapers back in the nursery. I fear those who favor repeal would sacrifice the established critical needs of the silent 95 percent of this Nation's seniors to the fire of a very vocal and politically savvy 5 percent.

Our colleagues are aware of the special concerns I have had that any reform package preserve the prescription drug benefit. Outpatient prescription drug coverage is perhaps the most far-reaching of all the catastrophic benefits. It is the only long-term care benefit in the new law, and as such represents a step toward a solution to other long-term care concerns.

This benefit not only would alleviate the financial burden of medication—costs which can run in excess of $120 per month for 5 million Medicare recipients. But it also includes a drug utilization review screen to prevent such problems as harmful drug interactions. As I said earlier tonight, this screen, in essence, is a drug safety program that will help every beneficiary, regardless of whether they exceed the deductible limit.

But I know many Members of this body have been unwilling to agree with me, at least for now, on this point. While I feel that is unfortunate, I am not willing to sacrifice the whole over a battle for even this very critical part.

Mr. President, our purposes here today should be to help people, not to hurt them. Our job today is to act, not to overreact. That is why we must defeat the Danforth-Roth amendment.

I will vote against this effort to turn our backs on our elderly and disabled and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. ROTH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having expired, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] would vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

NOT VOTING—1

Matsunaga

So the amendment (No. 989) was rejected.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCAIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, today we are reconsidering a program passed by the 100th Congress to provide coverage to the Nation's elderly for the costs of catastrophic illness. At that time, Mr. President, we thought we were doing a good thing. We wanted very much to ensure that no senior citizen, or his or her spouse, would ever become impoverished because of catastrophic illness. The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 was intended to achieve that goal, and the Congress acted to address this important need.

At that time, Mr. President, I had serious reservations about the financing of the program. After the program was enacted, and it became clear that many of the Nation's seniors simply did not want the program, either because of its financing or because they already had similar private coverage, I cosponsored a bill introduced by Senator McCAIN to delay the program, including the surtax and certain benefits, for 1 year, so that we could carefully review and improve the program.

Mr. President, just a few moments ago, I voted to repeal this new program. I did so because I was determined to respond to the concerns voiced by so many of my constituents in Rhode Island that the catastrophic coverage program, in its present form, is simply not acceptable to them. The parliamentary situation before the vote on the Danforth-Roth amendment was that no changes had been made in the program, and that is simply not what the people of Rhode Island want. The repeal vote having failed, Mr. President, I intend to vote in favor of Senator McCAIN's bill, which provides the Senate with its very last opportunity to make needed changes and improvements in this program.

Mr. President, I support Senator McCAIN's proposal for two very important reasons: It repeals the income tax surtax which so many Rhode Islanders oppose, and it retains some of the important benefits of the original program. I believe that the McCain bill is a dramatic improvement of a well-intended program, and will address many of the concerns of the senior citizens in Rhode Island and across this Nation.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield to permit the distinguished Republican leader and I to join in making an announcement regarding the discussions we have been having on the reconciliation bill and the schedule for the remainder of today and tomorrow?

Mr. BRADLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the Senator for his usual courtesy.

Mr. President, the distinguished Republican leader and I, along with Senators BYRD, HATFIELD, BENTSEN, PACKWOOD, SASSER, and DOMENICI, have just met for approximately 1 hour and 15 minutes to discuss the process by which we could proceed to consideration of and disposition of the reconciliation bill.

Following the promise that I made last evening, we had several discussions during the day, and the distinguished Republican leader had consulted with several of his colleagues. I can report to the Members of the Senate that the meeting was very open, frank, thorough, and from my perspective encouraging.

We do not yet have an agreement, but all of those who participated agreed without exception that we are moving toward an agreement with a sufficient degree of progress that justifies a further meeting tomorrow morning, that to include members of the House leadership of both parties.

Accordingly, it is my judgment, following that meeting and discussions with the distinguished Republican leader, that we should complete action on the catastrophic bill this evening and then recess until tomorrow morning, at which time the Senate will be in session and consider the Interior appropriations conference report while the meeting I have just described occurs in the hope and expectation that that meeting will result in agreement which we could then be in a position to announce to the Members of the Senate.

I emphasize that we have not yet reached an agreement, but, as I also stated, the progress was sufficiently encouraging for all of us to believe that this will be the best and most wise course of action. I cannot predict the time that will be involved in this. It is my intention that we are going to meet at 9:30 in the morning. It is my intention to have the Senate come in at 10 and go to the Interior appropriations conference report. The distinguished chairman of that committee has indicated to me that he anticipates a couple of hours. I do not see the chairman here on the floor, but he advised me he anticipated a couple of hours on that bill. By that time we should be in position to make a further announcement.

I will be pleased now to yield to the distinguished Republican leader for any comment that he may have in this regard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the majority leader.

I think the majority leader has stated correctly we have had a number of meetings today and I have met with a number of my colleagues and members of the administration.

I think we have one common interest, and as Senator BYRD indicated, we are going to destroy the Senate unless we get a handle on reconciliation. I am not blaming anyone. It has happened under the leadership of both parties. It has happened in the committees. We become like a State legislature; we have one big ball of wax every year. We are not protected by cloture waiver in the bill. You take it or leave it. You have a time limit. I think there is a genuine interest in trying to come to some resolution.

As I indicated to the majority leader, those of us on this side, and I think some on the other side, have another interest. Capital gains is of deep interest to the President of the United States. He went all through the campaign last year. It has been in the process all this year. The President obviously feels that is very important. It is very important.

So we have been trying to figure out some way to have a clean reconciliation bill and still ensure an opportunity to take up the capital gains matter at some appropriate time and hopefully pass it in the Senate.

But I guess I have said enough as far as specifics, but the point is we do not have any agreement yet. But we are all in good faith, and I believe every Senator would be saving several days in conference, or whatever, if we can come to some resolution.

Having said that, I told the majority leader I do not want to mislead anyone. In my position I have the responsibility also to the President of the United States, and I intend to carry that out.

So it is my hope that we can meet in the morning. Some of the Republican leaders are all over America, and we are trying to get them back by tomorrow morning. So I hope you will bear with us in the morning while we meet again and try to see if we can get to some resolution. It may take all day tomorrow.

I think in the long run it has been worth the effort, and we are prepared, as I told the majority leader, in good faith to see what we can do. If we cannot do it, then we have to, I guess, go the route of the reconciliation, go to conference with the two rather large reconciliation bills which might take 30 days or longer. So, I think if it works as we hope, we will meet tomorrow morning at 10, have debate on the Interior appropriations conference report while it is going on. Maybe we will be in a position by noon or shortly thereafter to make some announcement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Accordingly, Mr. President, I understand that the amendment by the Senator from New Jersey is to be accepted by the managers, following which there will be debate and one further rollcall vote on the underlying McCain bill. That will be the final rollcall vote this evening.

The Senate will be in session at 10 a.m. tomorrow and going shortly thereafter to the Interior appropriations conference report.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the leader yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, certainly.

Mr. BIDEN. Does the leader anticipate votes on the Interior appropriations bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, I believe there will be at least two votes.

Mr. BIDEN. I saw a finger go up to my right.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleagues, and I thank the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

CATASTROPHIC INSURANCE REFORM

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 990

(Purpose: To reestablish the respite care benefit in 1991 with modifications).

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] proposed an amendment numbered 990.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . RESPITE CARE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the amendments made by subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) of section 205 of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 shall take effect and apply to items and services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

(b) AMENDMENT TO PAYMENT THRESHOLD.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (4) of section 1961(II) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(II)), as added by section 205 of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 is amended to read as follows:

"(4) The 12-month period described in this paragraph is the 1-year period beginning on the date that the Secretary determines that a chronically dependent individual has incurred out-of-pocket part B cost sharing in an amount equal to $1780 in 1991 and equal to an amount in each succeeding year which is equal to an amount (rounded to the nearest multiple of $1) as the Secretary estimates will result, in that succeding year, in 5.5 percent of the average number of individuals enrolled under this part (other than individuals enrolled with an eligible organization under section 1876 or an organization described in subsection (a)(1)(A)) during the year incurring such amount. In the case of an individual who qualifies under this paragraph within 12 months after previously qualifying, the subsequent qualification shall begin a new 12-month period under this paragraph."

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this subsection shall apply to items and services furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I propose a small but, in my opinion, significant addition to the legislation now before us. This amendment salvages at least part of the respite care benefit that was enacted last year.

Now, some may ask, why the fuss over this very small benefit. Before I discuss my views, I'd like to take a moment to explain to Members of this body, what respite care is. Respite care is the provision of a little relief to family caregivers who are spending their lives caring for their chronically ill spouses or parents. Often, that family member is the only thing preventing the chronically ill person, who is living at home, from entering a nursing home.

The respite care benefit provides family support of 80 hours a year to help the caregiver in the home. I want my colleagues to be sure they heard that correctly: 80 hours a year. This is no runaway benefit that will cost hundreds of billions of dollars a year. But it will provide a respite from the incredible responsibility of caring for someone with chronic illness.

The catastrophic bill provided this benefit to about 300,000 families a year. Families who had an elderly member with serious chronic conditions and very high health care costs exceeding the $1,300 cap on doctor bills or the $600 prescription drug cap would be eligible for this new benefit. Except for people already in nursing homes we are talking about some of the sickest older Americans—and those with high health care costs.

Mr. President, I realize that the catastrophic program will have to be cut back significantly if it is going to continue in any form. This is the last amendment that can be offered to this bill now before us. I hope that we do not terminate this valuable program.

Mr. President, the amendment continues the respite benefit in a little more limited form than what was in the underlying catastrophic bill but even in this scaled-down form, about 60,000 Medicare beneficiaries a year will be helped; 60,000 of the very frail elderly, who remain in their home because of the tremendous commitment their family or loved one has made to them.

Mr. President, if we do not reinstate the respite benefit in this proposal, we are missing an opportunity to really reach out and give a hand to some very needy citizens in this country.

Mr. President, I understand that the managers of the bill are prepared to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, on our side, the amendment is acceptable.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, very briefly, I would like to thank the Senator from New Jersey, who has been a leader on this issue, for his very helpful contribution. Currently, due to the changes in the law made by the pending bill, the important respite benefit only applies to those qualifying for immunosuppressive and home IV drugs. Respite is important. It gives some assistance to those families caring for very ill family members.

This amendment will provide adequate protection in this area. There is enough money in the program to pay for Senator BRADLEY's proposal. For the rather nominal amount of money it would cost, we provide a good and important benefit.

I extend my appreciation to the Senator from New Jersey for proposing this amendment. We will gladly accept it on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY].

The amendment (No. 990) was agreed to.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to support the legislation offered by the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. McCAIN].

Last year, I voted for the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act because I believed it contained benefits that were greatly needed and desired by millions of senior citizens in Kentucky and across the Nation. Senior citizens had informed me of their concerns regarding the catastrophic cost of prolonged illness or injury on Medicare recipients. I believe that coverage of long-term hospitalization, home health care, respite care, hospice care, and protection from spousal impoverishment, and all benefits of the act, made significant progress toward easing the concerns of seniors regarding the cost of extended illness. The Congress developed a financing mechanism which we believed would pay the costs of the new benefits without imposing huge financial burdens on Medicare recipients or increasing the Federal budget deficit. As a matter of fact, several experts informed me that over two-thirds of my State's senior citizens would pay less than $9 extra per month in the first year for the new catastrophic benefits. We also believed that this new Medicare coverage would allow senior citizens to drop their private Medigap insurance, thereby saving them money. For these reasons I supported the act when it was considered by the Senate.

Let me reaffirm that I still support the concept of the act which was to provide needed protection from the high costs of acute catastrophic illness to Medicare recipients.

I have, however, heard from my senior constituents that they have some serious concerns with the act as it is currently written. They informed me that despite wide media coverage of the legislation as it was being considered, they did not know all the provisions of the act and its effect on them until it had been signed into law. Many senior citizens believed that the act provided coverage for their true catastrophic need—coverage for long-term care. As we all know, while the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act does provide limited benefits for long-term coverage, it does not cover the cost of long-term custodial care in a nursing home or at home. Other senior citizens informed me that they already had the coverage provided by the act, at a lesser cost, and because the act is mandatory they were paying for the same protection twice. Finally, senior citizens told me that they had some serious concerns with the financing of the new benefits.

The new benefits were paid for by both a flat premium and a progressive supplemental premium. The supplemental premium is based on the idea that those with a higher income will pay more than those with lower incomes. I do not believe that seniors resent having to pay for their health care. Seniors are not a group of greedy malcontents who want others to pay the costs of benefits targeted only for seniors. I think they would be willing to pay a reasonable price for benefits that truly meet their catastrophic health care needs. What they resent is paying twice for the same benefits or paying for benefits they don't want or need.

Mr. President, as we all know, there has been a groundswell of opposition to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act as it is currently written. Some senior citizens have called for its outright repeal while others want the financing or benefit package changed.

Earlier this year my distinguished colleague from Arizona Senator MCCAIN, introduced S. 335 which would have maintained the benefits already available to senior citizens while delaying the other benefits and the supplemental premium for 1 year to give Congress the opportunity, in a reasoned and deliberate manner, to address the concerns senior citizens have with the act. I am proud to say that I cosponsored S. 335 and voted for it twice here on the Senate floor. Unfortunately a majority of the Senate decided not to support S. 335. The Senate Finance Committee tried to craft changes in the act that were acceptable to the majority of the committee but could not do so. Senior citizens continued to express their concerns with the act and 2 days ago the House of Representatives responded by repealing the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

I do not believe that total repeal is in the best interests of Medicare recipients in my State or anywhere in the country. The act for States like mine where there is a large number of lower income senior citizens was really quite a good program. Rather I am a cosponsor and strong supporter of Senator MCCAIN's proposal to scale back the benefits but continue to provide important protections against catastrophic illness. Senator MCCAIN's proposal maintains many important benefits such as long-term hospitalization, spousal impoverishment protection, expanded home health and hospice care, respite care, mammography screening, coverage of the cost of immunosuppressive and home IV drug therapy and the Medicaid buy-in and pregnant mothers and infants program. It returns coverage of skilled nursing care to prior law and provides seniors with protection that will assure them access to the Medigap coverage they had prior to the enactment of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. The supplemental premium, part B out-of-pocket cap and outpatient prescription drug benefits are repealed. The retained benefits are paid for with the catastrophic flat premium.

I believe that the retention of these important catastrophic benefits while reducing the overall cost of the program will address the concerns of senior citizens who thought that the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act was too expensive. Furthermore, it maintains the semblance of a catastrophic protection program for those Medicare recipients who are not affluent and for whom the prospect of catastrophic illness is a pretty scary thought. I urge my colleagues to support the distinguished Senator from Arizona's proposal.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, few issues have fueled more controversy, more editorials, more misinformation, more generational slurs, and more political posturing than the Medicare Castastrophic Coverage Act. Cited as the most significant expansion of Medicare benefits since Medicare establishment 20 years ago, this bipartisan proposal that was signed into law by President Reagan lies before us today on the brink of total repeal.

I was not a part of this body when the law was passed, but both my distinguished predecessor, Senator Proxmire, any my colleague, Mr. KASTEN, supported the expansion along with 84 other Senators. I ask unanimous consent that, at the end of my statement, a recent editorial by my much esteemed predecessor be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, it is my strong sense that this program was designed to address a very real need and that in the course of numerous hearings that were held, there was substantial testimony that documented that need. Over a period of 18 months of House and Senate consideration in the last Congress, millions of postcards and letters poured into congressional offices at that time, asking elected representatives to support the Catastrophic Coverage Act.

Well one of the things that I have already learned in my short tenure here is that the legislative process involves a lot of negotiation. To get something done, everyone usually has to give a little here and give a little there. It is the balancing of all concerns, the identification of common goals and needs and then compromise, that allow us to move this country forward. Therefore it is no surprise that everyone is not totally pleased with the final product. And for good reason.

Like all of my colleagues, I have heard from thousands of senior citizens in Wisconsin who, for one reason or another, do not like the current law. Some do not like the nature of the surtax, arguing that it is unfair because seniors pay taxes that go to education, even though they themselves do not have children in schools; many of them want the benefits if they are financed through the General Treasury, increases in FICA taxes on working Americans, or through a whole host of new tax measures. Some think the surtax is just too expensive and most incorrectly believe that they would be paying the maximum $800 a year. Some do not like the mandatory nature of the program, arguing that they have duplicative coverage or that the Federal Government is forcing them to pay for something that they just do not need. Some would rather see Congress enact a comprehensive long-term care plan or national health insurance in lieu of taking this piecemeal approach. And others just want the whole thing repealed.

And I agree with many of those concerns. If I had my own personal preferences, I believe we need to control health care costs in this country and adopt a national health policy that provides universal access to Americans of all ages. But I understand that that will not happen overnight, and that the original authors of this legislation were trying to provide the most comprehensive expansion possible under the deficit neutral terms of the administration.

I, too, believe we need a comprehensive long-term care plan that would provide both home- and community-based and nursing home care for our elderly and disabled. But I am also aware the cost of such a program would be at least $45 billion each year and that it would be irresponsible to create such a massive new program with our current deficit and with no cost controls on home and nursing home care.

And I agree that $800 a year is extravagant for the actual benefits that would be provided to those few Americans that would pay the maximum supplemental premium. Unfortunately, the vast majority of elderly would not pay any supplemental premium and many of those individuals have certainly been misled during this debate.

I am less sensitive to the argument that all new Medicare expansions must be funded by the entire population. The perception seems to be that seniors are picking up the whole tab for Medicare A and Medicare B. To the fiscal contrary, Medicare A is being financed by current wage earners; the reserves in the trust fund contributed by today's retirees were depleted many years ago. The fund is solvent, for the time being, not because of interest earned over the years, but because of the increased amount of wages subject to the HI tax and because of the increased percentage paid by wage earners today. The demographic reality is that when Social Security passed in 1935, the average American lived to be 58 years old. We now live to be 74. While that increased longevity is a blessing and something for which we are all grateful, it means that those contributions over the years—in both Social Security and Medicare part A—simply have not stretched as far as we planned back then. Likewise, the monthly premium paid by Medicare B participants covers only 25 percent of the cost of that program. The other 75 percent comes from general revenues, which means a broad tax base. So, in reality, working families with small children are indeed sharing the burden of care for their retired counterparts.

And I am concerned with the Medigap situation. There is just conflicting information with regard to what some of these policies cover. While millions of elderly are paying for supplemental policies, it is far from clear how many "gaps" those policies actually fill. And, despite what has actually happened since enactment of the law, insurance companies have a responsibility under law to inform their beneficiaries of duplication and to pass along those savings. Some of those savings have been minimized by the exorbitant premium increases passed along to the elderly in January of this year. But I am not altogether convinced that a good faith effort has been made by all of these policy providers to actually comply with the requirements of the catastrophic law. Because of that, there are millions of senior citizens who believe they are covered for benefits, but simply are not. To me, it is one of the greater injustices that so many elderly are being taken advantage of by their private sector providers. It is an issue I intend to explore through my service on the Special Committee on Aging.

So today we are faced with very, very difficult choices. I have told my constituents that I would support a bipartisan, good faith effort to repair the flaws in the catastrophic law. I have promised to give very careful consideration to all proposals and to support repeal only as a last resort.

I am pleased with the thoughtful proposals before us and the great leadership that has been provided by both sides of the aisle in the Senate Finance Committee.

Today I will support the amendment offered by our colleague from Massachusetts, because it is the only opportunity to save the prescription drug benefit. Only 3 out of 10 elderly have any coverage for outpatient prescription drugs. And with those costs escalating at a rate much higher than the consumer index, I think prescription drug costs will become more and more of a burden for elderly on fixed incomes.

I will oppose our colleague from Florida's proposal to make the program voluntary if the Secretary determines that the beneficiary has equal coverage from some other source. While I agree with my colleague's desire to give people options, I do not think that his proposal is workable as written. It creates another level of bureaucracy and paperwork that we simply don't need.

I will oppose the motion to finance the catastrophic benefits by removal of the "bubble." While I appreciate the desire to redistribute the cost-sharing of this program, I have three fundamental concerns with the Harkin-Levin amendment. First, this is a tax increase and the President has made it clear that he will veto any proposal that contains such a provision. Second, it is altogether unclear that the proposal could be made to work. The authors have been unable to work the numbers out. My sense is that the Finance Committee could have similar problems. And finally, I am disturbed by raising general revenues and earmarking them for this purpose.

I will very reluctantly oppose the amendment offered by Senators DURENBERGER and MITCHELL. I believe it is a very good, bipartisan, and thoughtful attempt to salvage this legislation, and I support that goal. At the same time, it is clear that the majority of the elderly at this time are unprepared to pay this surtax. Despite the fact that the cap on the supplemental premium would be $200 and despite the fact that only 14 percent of the elderly would even pay that much, it is my sense that the very nature of the surtax is fundamentally offensive to many of my constituents. I believe that, in the future, expansions of Medicare will hinge partially on the beneficiaries' willingness to bear a large share of the cost. But today, because there is a perceived injustice in the surtax, I am simply unable to support this amendment.

With regard to the amendment proposed by our colleagues from Michigan and Rhode Island, I am supportive of the inclusion of catastrophic coverage for out-of-pocket doctor bills. This is something that is missing in the McCain approach. And while our colleague from Arizona quotes polls that say that the elderly do not want nor need this benefit, I concur with our colleague from South Dakota, Senator DASCHLE, that the results of polls largely depend on how the question is asked. Medicare part B growth has not been contained. Without some benefit for catastrophic physician bills, the elderly are going to be charged increasingly high prices that are in many ways beyond their control. And I think we need to do everything we can to provide options for coverage. The voluntary option to purchase insurance for prescription drugs, respite, mammograms, hospice, and skilled nursing facility care is desirable. And as I understand this amendment, it is a truly voluntary program that would cost approximately $15 per month. These are, by and large, benefits not presently covered by the majority of private sector plans. One of the most significant losses in all of the amendments offered today is that of the skilled nursing facility benefit. While there have certainly been problems in the administration of the limited nursing home benefit under Medicare, I think elimination of the 3-day hospitalization requirement and the extension from 100 days to 150 days are desirable benefits. These provisions which were included in the catastrophic bill were first steps toward long-term care and I believe their repeal in all of the amendments, including the McCain amendment, is a step backward. While I share the concerns expressed by many of my colleagues regarding the actuarily soundness of this program and the adverse risk selection, I believe that the proposal is worthy of consideration in conference with the House.

I will support the McCain proposal. As I have indicated earlier, I regret the deletion of the physician out-of-pocket cap, the comprehensive prescription drug coverage and the expansion of the skilled nursing home benefit. But given the nature of our dilemma, and the desirability of eliminating the surtax, the proposal is sound and worthy of support.

Because of the valid alternatives offered by the previous amendments, I do not intend to support either the delay of implementation of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act, nor the total repeal of the law. To extend this debate further, into next year's political election cycle, would not yield more thoughtful alternatives. I am confident that all Members in this body have put forth their best efforts to fix the current law. Likewise, I cannot in good conscience repeal an act that—while imperfect—addresses the real and serious needs of millions of Americans. It is my sincere hope that the changes made here today are solid footing for a sound reform of this act.

These have been difficult decisions and I have weighed very carefully the advantages and disadvantages of each proposal. Into each decision I have factored the voices of my constituents. While they have not spoken in a uniform voice, they have advocated change. I have done my utmost to best represent their collective concerns.

I thank my colleagues for presenting us with the wide range of alternatives that has enabled me to do so.

EXHIBIT 1

[From the Superior Telegram, Sept. 20, 1989]

ELDERLY FORCED TO MAKE FATAL CHOICES

(By William Proxmire)

A surprising number of Americans would rather die than pay more in taxes. And I really mean die.

Last year Congress finally enacted what the American Association of Retired Persons believed America's elderly need urgently: full medical care for when we are older and suffer a devastating illness that could not only impoverish us but also take our lives.

Now many of the elderly are emphatically telling Congress that they don't want catastrophic care if they have to pay taxes for it.

Nearly 60 percent of the elderly eligible for catastrophic care would be exempt, because of their low income, from paying even 1 cent of the most controversial catastrophic health care tax—the "supplementary premium."

This tax phases in as a percentage of the federal income tax liability of the care beneficiary. A single person with an income of $12,376 would pay no supplementary premium tax. A married couple with an income of $17,514 would also be exempt. The tax gradually rises to a maximum of about 2 percent of taxable income. For instance a single beneficiary with a taxable income of $42,840 would pay $800 in the supplementary premium tax next April 1990 on 1989 income. By 1993 the maximum tax would rise to about 2.3 percent of taxable income.

This is what the elderly so strongly oppose. Congress believes that the serious budget crisis would not permit the government to assume the cost catastrophic health care for the elderly out of current revenues. To do so would increase an already massive deficit. Since the benefits would only be available to the elderly, Congress reasoned that the elderly should pay for it.

The highly respected American Association of Retired Persons, the principle lobbying organization for senior citizens, agreed. Now it is clear that a large proportion of the elderly who would both benefit and pay more in taxes with this legislation strongly disapprove of it. The taxpayers' revolt has been so potent that many members of Congress, who supported the legislation when it was enacted in 1988, are vigorously calling for its repeal.

Here is a dilemma that will be with Congress for many years. Medical cures that seem almost magical for the ills that will befall most of us, if we are lucky enough to survive into our old age, are coming on with a rush. Just in the past 15 years, life expectancy at birth has increased by almost four years. The medical profession has cancer and heart disease on the run. A generation from now there could be tens of millions of George Burns, 90 years old or older in America.

The cost, which will rise each year, is as horrendous as the medical technology is marvelous. The elderly like to live longer, but they hate paying for it. Advancing medical technology is offering them a contract they won't sign. They also vote like no other population group so Congress may have to repeal the catastrophic care bill.

Congress' principle tax-writing committee—House Ways and Means—has proposed a compromise. They would cut the top surtax rate in half on the elderly who take catastrophic coverage. They would also give the elderly the choice of completely avoiding the surtax by giving up catastrophic coverage and also losing care by physicians and other medical services.

The elderly would have a choice. If an an elderly person you'd rather take a chance on dying than pay more taxes, Congress may say, "Be our guest." The powerful political message here is that millions feel far more deeply about raising taxes than members of Congress realize. Congress is getting that message loud and clear.

William Proxmire, former chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, retired last year after 31 years in the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise in support of Senator MCCAIN's proposal which retains the flat premium and provides those benefits which can be covered by such a premium. And, it is astounding how many benefits can be retained.

What is retained is:

The extended inpatient hospital benefit;

The blood deductible;

The revised home health benefit which expands benefits from 21 to 38 days;

The respite care benefit which provides chronically dependent beneficiaries up to 80 hours of in-home services;

After 1 year, the mammography screening program;

The coverage of certain drugs, including immunosuppressive drugs and home IV drug therapy; and

The expanded hospice benefit.

All of this is financed by the existing flat premium which this year is $4 and rises no higher than $4.90 in fiscal year 1990; $7.40 in fiscal year 1991; $9.20 in fiscal year 1992; and, $10.20 in fiscal year 1993.

In fiscal year 1989, the benefits will cost $1.06 billion.

In fiscal year 1989, the flat premium raises $1.165 billion in total income.

The difference between the revenues and costs are +$150 million.

Over 5 years, the benefits will cost approximately $9.023 billion.

Over 5 years, the flat premium raises $13.477 billion.

Over 5 years, the difference between the revenues and costs is +$4.454 billion which is a comfortable cushion. Or, the Secretary also has the authority to reduce the flat premium if there are excessive revenues.

Mr. President, I believe this is a workable proposal that we in the Senate should support. It is fiscally responsible.

We keep the flat premium and provide seniors with the benefits that $4 will cover.

The McCain bill is sound health policy and is a package of catastrophic benefits that seniors will be willing and able to purchase at an affordable cost.

The seniors in America know about the McCain amendment. The seniors in America want the McCain amendment. I am pleased to support the McCain amendment. I am pleased to work with Senator MCCAIN since we started this effort in May. Mr. President, the McCain legislation is understood and is wanted by seniors.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the pending legislation, S. 1726, the Catastrophic Insurance Reform bill, which appears to be our best hope to maintain some of the important benefits contained in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

During debate on S. 1726, I supported an amendment offered by Senator DURENBERGER and a bipartisan group of Senators, and I regret that it was defeated. This amendment would have achieved two important goals—retention of many of the important benefits contained in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, and reduction of the supplemental premium. It was a good compromise between the current legislation and repeal, which is favored by a vocal group of seniors who object to the current financing of benefits.

In addition I supported an amendment offered by Senator KENNEDY which would have maintained the important new prescription drug benefit contained in current law. Paying for outpatient prescription drugs is a great burden for many older Americans, and this is a benefit for which there is little private insurance coverage. Unfortunately, this amendment was also defeated by a majority of my colleagues in the Senate.

I supported the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, and I voted to opposition to repealing it. This legislation, the first major expansion of Medicare since it was enacted in 1965, was an important first step in providing catastrophic coverage for Medicare beneficiaries. It provides important insurance against catastrophic acute care and prescription drug costs.

In an effort to maintain some of the benefits contained in the 1988 catastrophic law, I voted for final passage of S. 1726, the Catastrophic Insurance Reform Act, introduced by Senator MCCAIN. This legislation retains the following important benefits contained in current law—hospitalization, the blood deductible, home health, respite care, mammography screening, and coverage of home IV drugs and immunosuppressives. I regret that it repeals the expanded skilled nursing home benefits, the outpatient prescription drug benefit, and the cap on part B out-of-pocket expenditures. These reductions in benefits were made so that the supplemental premium, which has received so much opposition, could be repealed. The remaining benefits would be financed by the existing flat monthly part B premium.

The House of Representatives has voted to repeal the catastrophic legislation, so this issue is still not finally resolved. It is my sincere belief that the elderly of this Nation will be best served by far if the House recedes to the legislation that was just passed by the Senate.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, a great deal of debate and introspection has brought us here today. The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act—the most sweeping expansion of benefits in the history of the program—is at a crossroads. Will it be repealed, as we watched the other body vote earlier this week? Or will we search for what was best in this program and make a constructive effort to move ahead with that?

Let's remember what this program is about, and why the Congress and President Reagan created it with such enthusiasm less than 2 years ago.

The catastrophic program provides coverage for unlimited hospitalization; unlimited physician services after a catastrophic deductible; important new long-term care benefits, including skilled nursing home care and home health and home respite care; new coverage for outpatient prescription drugs; and the first preventive care benefit ever—mammography screening for breast cancer.

These benefits were enacted because millions of seniors could not afford to buy private insurance protection against serious illness. Millions more have purchased inadequate policies—often multiple policies—which don't meet basic minimum Federal standards.

Yes, and some retirees are fortunate enough to have purchased excellent insurance against catastrophic coverage, or to have such coverage purchased for them. For these people, the catastrophic law provided protections against double coverage, so that nobody would be forced to buy duplicative insurance.

In fact, most of the public debate over catastrophic has been on the financing, not on the benefits. We've heard from numerous aging groups and labor unions—do not repeal the benefits. In addition to the harm repeal would do to seniors—including those who are already hospitalized and dependent on the new coverage—it would establish a horrible precedent. In this era of the uninsured and the underinsured, we should not be repealing catastrophic.

Let's take another look at the financing. The supplemental premium, which was intended to be fair, is perceived by many as too burdensome. The maximum premium amount—and even amounts well below the maximum $800—has been criticized. So, in good faith, we've gone back to the drawing board.

The Finance Committee has labored for weeks, examining options for adjusting the catastrophic financing and for corresponding adjustments in the benefit package. On behalf of the committee, I can say that this task was not easy. Nor was it taken lightly. In fact, it has brought us here today.

Now, we face a range of options for modifying the catastrophic program in a manner that will be acceptable to beneficiaries and that will preserve various benefits. I commend all of my colleagues who will offer amendments today in an effort to preserve important new coverage for senior citizens. Let us not forget that this was—and remains—our primary goal. We must strengthen the Medicare program. We must take steps to meet the elderly's unmet needs, both for acute care and for long-term care services.

Do not turn your backs on the senior citizens of this country by denying them necessary coverage. Do not repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, on October 27, 1987, I read the following portion of a Chicago Tribune editorial into the RECORD:

> If you're over 65 or hope to be some day, or if you love someone who is or wants to be, don't be too quick to cheer for that new catastrophic health care bill speeding through the Congress. However it's being hyped, the truth is that the legislation, as passed by the House, won't protect the elderly from the devastating costs of most catastrophic illness.

Those words are just as true today as they were in 1987.

Two years ago senior Americans were led to believe that the goodhearted Congress of the United States would provide them with all of the health benefits that they desperately needed. Many of those same seniors now know that when the Congress promises the world with a fence around it, the taxpayers had better head for the hills.

Mr. President, during my nearly 17 years in the Senate I have received thousands of letters from the senior citizens in North Carolina concerning problems with health care. The complaints usually focus on rising premiums, denial of coverage, premature discharge. The list goes on and on. But never have seniors in North Carolina been so agitated and so angered by an action of the U.S. Government as they have been by the passage of catastrophic tax. Notice I said catastrophic tax, for that is precisely what it is.

If there ever was a case in which the time-worn policy of tax and spend and spend and tax led to disillusionment and fiscal irresponsibility this is it. Lawmakers had plenty of warning, but Congress once again ignored those of us who predicted that more taxes would trigger a firestorm among retired Americans. These new taxes, by the way, paid for programs that 80 percent of retired elderly neither wanted or needed.

In fact, Mr. President, the majority of those who promoted this ill-conceived program were the hired guns of the professional Washington lobbies. Catastrophic protection was not very high on the list of health priorities for the majority of senior citizens. Yet no one wanted to vote against that enticing title, "The Medicare Catastrophic Illness Coverage Act." I was one of 11, as I recall, who did vote against what I felt was a very bad and very unfair piece of legislation.

The senior citizens of this country have made an important contribution to the debate on the future of health care in this country. They have thrown up a roadblock in the headlong drive toward the rationing of health care through socialized medicine. That is the direction we would have travelled had the seniors not stood up and declared that the benefits this act contained were already provided and more efficiently, by the private sector.

Mr. President, as a senior American myself, I was deeply offended by those in this body—and those in the media—who proclaimed that all of the uproar over this legislation was caused by greedy seniors. To that I say bullfeathers.

The senior citizens who rose up against this program are people who worked and saved all of their lives to make this country better for each and every one of us. They built this country. Now some around here are calling them names for refusing to be further burdened by more and more taxes. My hat's off to them. They have put the U.S. Congress in its place.

I commend those Senators who have joined the fight to repeal this onerous tax. It should never have been approved by Congress in the first place. I was criticized severely by the news media in my State when I, and a few other Senators, voted against this socialistic catastrophic pipe dream in 1988. It is comforting to have so many converts this year willing to repeal legislation that should never have been approved.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today we have had a number of options before us on how to address the health care needs of this Nation's senior citizens. From my perspective, the Harkin-Levin approach offered us the best chance of enacting a catastrophic health insurance program with adequate benefits and which was paid for by an equitable funding mechanism. The Senate, however, did not support this approach.

It is also clear from this debate that there is no support for the supplemental premium surtax in the current law and that a majority does not even support a somewhat reduced surtax. I believe that the surtax in the current law is fundamentally unfair and cannot support it.

The McCain approach embodied in S. 1726 is not my preferred choice, but it is the only choice available for those who support some form of catastrophic health insurance and who oppose the surtax. It provides, among other benefits, for 365-day hospital care coverage, some prescription drug coverage, mammography screening, hospice care benefits, and protection against spousal impoverishment.

This is a limited package of benefits, but important benefits, nevertheless. It is clearly preferable to outright repeal of this program, and it is for that reason that I will vote to support the McCain bill, S. 1726.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I have talked to many, many Montana seniors about the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. I have also received thousands of letters on it.

People have told me in no uncertain terms they don't like the way the program is financed. They also say they think some of the benefits—but not all—have value to them.

As a member of the Senate Finance Committee, I worked for many months on this legislation.

Mr. President, we hammered out this bill under very, very tight constraints. When we were working on this legislation over a year ago, the Reagan administration insisted on the current financing scheme.

The administration told us: If seniors want these benefits, then they must pay for them. They said it could not increase the Federal budget deficit. They said we had to build up very significant reserves, financed by beneficiaries, to ensure the fiscal solvency of the program.

Those were very strict conditions. But we met them all. We succeeded in developing a package of benefits, and the mechanisms to pay for it, under those strict conditions.

We believed that the benefits in the package were important to seniors. We believed the benefits were so important, the package would be worth it to them.

Mr. President, we acted in good faith.

But the bottom line is, do seniors want all of these benefits and the surtax, or some of the benefits and no surtax?

My many conversations with Montana seniors have convinced me that they don't want the surtax. They believe strongly that it's not necessary and it's not fair.

And they don't want or need all of the benefits the bill provides. Many of the benefits in the program are valuable. No question about it.

Spousal impoverishment. Protection from the cost of long-term hospital stays. Respite care and home health care. Mammography screening.

Others are far less important. The cap on out-of-pocket doctor payments, for example, and the prescription drug benefit.

The McCain proposal strikes the right balance. It repeals the surtax. And it keeps the benefits that Montana seniors tell me they want.

Mr. President, I will vote for the McCain proposal today. Of all the alternatives we have seen during this debate, it makes the most sense.

I also want to say that this vote does not mark the end of a debate.

As a member of the Pepper Commission, I can attest that we will soon embark on a very important debate: how to provide Americans with protection against the expenses of long-term care.

We have had many months of study, meetings, and hearings in the Pepper Commission, and we have more yet to come. Next year we will issue the Pepper Commission's report on long-term care.

I look forward to that debate. That is the debate Montana seniors have told me they want us to get on with.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise tonight because I believe very deeply that the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act desperately needs reform and is unfair in some respects. But I also believe that the benefits of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act are simply too important to repeal.

The catastrophic program expanded Medicare benefits to eliminate the fear that a lengthy and costly illness will devastate a family's finances. While we may hope and pray that we or someone we love does not experience a serious illness with catastrophic costs, none of us knows which of us will.

We have cast a series of important votes today in an effort to reform the act, to preserve the benefits while addressing its shortcomings. There is nothing more important to me than to make sure this program works and works fairly.

These benefits in the Catastrophic Act would remove the fear from millions of the elderly that a lengthy and costly illness will devastate their finances and those of their families: the cap on out-of-pocket expenses under Medicare part B, the limit on hospital costs, expanded home health care benefits, expanded skilled nursing care. These are major benefit expansions—the first since Medicare was enacted.

These benefits are simply too important to repeal. The act makes significant improvements in Medicare coverage for all of our elderly. Some of the benefits are unavailable in the private sector—respite care, for example. Others are very expensive in the private sector—such as the prescription drug benefit.

Today, we have voted down five different plans to reform the act. We must not repeal the act. We must vote to support the McCain bill.

I understand the anger about the increased Medicare premiums. I agree that the supplemental premium is an unfair burden and I have voted three times today to eliminate it. And, in voting for the McCain bill, my colleagues and I will have eliminated this unfair burden. Many middleclass elderly who will have to pay the supplemental premium feel that they will pay an unfair tax and not receive adequate benefits. I agree.

Some people are also very concerned that they are paying for coverage they already receive from former employers or through Medigap policies. I share that concern. Many Medicare beneficiaries have Medigap policies paid for, at least in part, by former employers. Others purchase their own policies. Under the law, duplicate coverage is supposed to phase out and private premiums are supposed to fall accordingly, but this is not happening the way it was supposed to. Our Federal retirees feel especially hard hit by duplicate coverage. They are, and we must eliminate this inequity.

These problems must be addressed, and we have tried to address them today. In deliberating how to vote today, I was guided by two goals: One was to eliminate, or, at the very least, severely cut back, the supplemental premium. The second was to retain the benefits that meet the needs of the elderly, needs that have not disappeared since last year when the Senate overwhelmingly passed this act, with bipartisan support.

In voting today, I cosponsored the amendment offered by my colleague from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, because it repealed the unfair surtax while keeping vital prescription drug and hospital benefits.

I supported the amendment offered by Senator DURENBERGER although it did not completely eliminate the supplemental premium because it retained important hospitalization and physical coverage.

I also supported the amendment proposed by Senator RIEGLE and Senator CHAFEE which would have eliminated the surtax but kept hospitalization coverage and retained coverage of catastrophic physician costs, but at a much higher level. I supported this proposal even though it made some important benefits optional, some benefits, including mammography, that I believe should have been included in the mandatory category.

And, now, Mr. President, I will vote for the McCain legislation and against complete repeal. It is the only option left that preserves any of the important benefits that the act created. Catastrophic hospitalization coverage, expanded home health and hospice benefits, and respite care are preserved. While I may have preferred to preserve other benefits as well, I support the McCain bill and urge my colleagues to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No additional amendments being in order, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time remaining is 15 minutes and 3 minutes and 7 seconds for a the respective sides.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PRESSLER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague, Senator McCAIN, in supporting a catastrophic health insurance program that retains many good benefits but gets rid of the excessive surtax method of financing them. Twice this past summer I have voted to support the distinguished Senator from Arizona on this matter. I voted to delay the surtax because it is opposed by senior citizens and it is bad public policy at this time. For that reason, I voted against the Durenberger-Mitchell amendment. The Durenberger amendment retained a surtax.

The debate today is evidence of the tension between paying for benefits and developing a way to pay for those benefits.

Everyone wants to help those aged most in need—the poor and frail elderly. I am among that group and that is why I support the McCain amendment. It removes the surtax which is abhorrent to the middle-income elderly. In fact, no surtax is the only acceptable approach for those elderly. At the same time, the McCain amendment preserves benefits for those aged who have no other way of financing their health care needs. It is a "happy medium" between outright repeal and a surtax to pay for benefits.

Senator McCAIN's amendment preserves the catastrophic core consisting of expanded hospital benefits, home health, respite care, mammography, hospice, blood benefit and immunosuppressive and IV drug benefits. A modified skilled nursing home benefit is preserved, along with the Medicaid buy-in provision. It is extremely important that they are the foundation for any effective long-term care program.

Outright repeal of these benefits would be a setback for seniors who are so poor they cannot afford to pay for a Medigap policy to take over where Medicare stops. That includes a significant number of elderly in America.

The poor and frail elderly are as much my concern as those who can afford their own policies. The McCain amendment respects the freedom of those who don't want a surtax and helps the poor who have no other way to obtain quality health care services.

The controversy over the catastrophic Medicare surtax has generated hundreds of thousands of pieces of mail. This clearly demonstrates that America's senior citizens want a voice in what they pay for it. They want to be part of anything we develop here. This was an example of Congress developing something without getting the grassroots support. The crafting of health care policy no longer can take place behind closed doors. During the past few months seniors let us know what they want. They have become involved in the formation of health care policy. We certainly know that they do not want a surtax, but they do want long-term care benefits.

I think the main message from this whole exercise is that the senior citizens across this country want us to hold meetings among them, want us to consult at the grass roots. They do not want us just to listen to Washington lobbyists, but to go out in the country and listen to what the people want.

The amendment of our distinguished colleague, Senator McCAIN, best represents what seniors in this country want. Of course it is not ideal. However, given the current choices of repeal, retaining the surtax and the McCain amendment, the McCain amendment is the best approach.

We should support this amendment and use it as a foundation for designing an even better long-term care policy for our Nation.

I wish to pay tribute to my colleague, Senator McCAIN, who has provided us leadership in this matter.

● Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I am supporting the McCain amendment because I believe catastrophic care protection is important and I do not believe we should repeal this program.

The McCain amendment eliminates the surtax while keeping many important benefits. I believed the Durenberger compromise provided better protection and was more soundly financed, and I am disappointed that this proposal was defeated. I think it was very carefully developed. Physician costs are increasing now by about 15 percent each year, significantly increasing out-of-pocket costs for beneficiaries. The McCain compromise provides no protection against these out-of-pocket increases.

But the McCain amendment does retain many good provisions in existing law like, including home health care and hospice care expansions. While I am concerned that the way this compromise is financed may not be adequate and may create problems in the future, I think we should fix the catastrophic care program and not eliminate the important benefits it now provides.●

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor of the Catastrophic Reform Act, legislation introduced by my colleague from Arizona to make needed changes in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

I believe this legislation represents the most reasonable catastrophic reform proposal offered to date. It addresses the groundswell of concern among our Nation's seniors by scrapping completely the controversial supplemental surtax. At the same time, it retains the most important benefits of the Catastrophic Act, including long-term hospitalization protection, spousal impoverishment protection, home health, respite, and hospice care benefits, mammograms, and the so-called Mitchell drugs.

Like this measure, both proposals offered on the House floor on Wednesday proposed to eliminate the surtax. But there the similarities end. The Stark-Waxman-Gradison proposal, defeated by a vote of 156 to 269, would have retained none of the core benefits of the act. Instead, it would have preserved only a scaled down prescription drug benefit, home health, hospice, and respite programs. The so-called Donnelly-Archer proposal, which passed by a vote of 360 to 66, would repeal the act entirely.

I believe we can address the program of the surtax without resorting to all-out repeal—a drastic solution that would leave many senior citizens totally unprotected against potentially ruinous medical bills. Under the legislation introduced by Senator McCAIN, we can totally eliminate the surtax, while retaining the benefits our senior citizens deserve and want.

Our passage of the Catastrophic Coverage Act in 1988 contained the implicit promise that we would protect senior citizens against catastrophic health expenses—without imposing on them a catastrophic financial burden. If we are serious about keeping this promise, we can keep it—but only if we reject repeal, and support the Catastrophic Reform Act.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I continue to support the proposal of my colleague from Arizona, Senator McCAIN, for reasons I have already stated, and I oppose repeal.

First and foremost, Mr. President, the McCain proposal eliminates the supplemental premium which our constituents are telling us they do not want.

Second, it retains several good benefits. It retains the hospital protections, which will be used by almost 2 million Medicare beneficiaries in any given year.

At this point in the debate, of course, the question of the supplemental premium is settled, but I just want to reemphasize once again for the benefit of my constituents that the McCain proposal responds to the outpouring of protest from the elderly about this surtax.

It keeps the spousal impoverishment provision which will protect from impoverishment the spouse of a nursing home resident who continues to reside in the community. This clearly is a major benefit which we must retain.

Senator McCAIN's proposal would also keep the blood deductible, the home health, respite care, hospice, and mammography benefits as well as the home IV and immunosuppressive drug benefit.

I argued earlier this year that, although these were good benefits, they were not sufficient to generate support for the catastrophic program given the high cost of the program to the tax paying older person.

However, in the context of the current McCain proposal, the total cost of the program would be met by the flat basic premium of around $4 per month in 1989. None of this small premium is exorbitant. Hence, in this circumstance, I believe that these benefits are worth the cost.

In addition, Senator MCCAIN's proposal retains benefits for the low-income which will be paid for through general revenues, not through the premiums paid by Medicare beneficiaries.

Mr. President, this approach is preferable to outright repeal because it keeps good benefits which otherwise would be lost.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support the McCain proposal.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. President, the hour is late and I will try to be brief. I wish to extend my appreciation to Members on both sides of the aisle who were of enormous assistance to me and, more importantly, to this cause.

I would also like to point out my deep appreciation for the patience and tolerance displayed by the chairman of the Finance Committee, who has had to wrestle with this issue for far longer than I have. He has always showed me and others in this body the utmost courtesy and consideration.

I also would like to thank my friend from West Virginia, Senator ROCKEFELLER, who I have had the pleasure of spending today with. Senator HATCH brought this issue to the fore and provided me with a great deal of assistance and, in some cases, courage. Senator SIMON and Senator HEFLIN have been very much involved in this issue for a very long period of time; and also Senator GORTON, Senator RUDMAN, Senator GRAMM, and many, many others.

No work like this is possible without staff work. I would like to thank Nancy Taylor of Senator HATCH's staff; Jeff Sanders of the Budget Committee; Ted Tottman of Senator GRASSLEY's staff; Ed Kivett of Senator GRAMM's staff; Doug Badger of the Policy Committee staff; Gwendolyn Van Paasschen, Dave McIntyre, and Chris Koch of my staff.

Mr. President, there are many others that I would like to thank.

Finally, I would like to say I think we have done something very important here tonight. We could not have done it without this body acting in a fashion that I think we can all be proud of. I believe that tonight millions of senior citizens will rest a little bit easier in the knowledge that the Congress of the United States, at least this body, has reacted in a sensitive and caring fashion.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I guess it is appropriate to say that I am going to vote for the McCain bill, because I think, with respect to home health care, mammography, and a lot of other things, it has at least something to offer, and something constructive is better than nothing. I think it merits our vote.

I wish to thank Senator MCCAIN. He, as always, has been a gentleman and a pleasure to work with.

Also, I wish to thank my own staff, Tamera Stanton, Karen Pollitz, Mary Ella Payne; and also Marina Weiss and Joe Humphreys of Senator BENTSEN's staff; and all those who have put up and progressed arduously through this long day.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

The bill, having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARKIN). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 99, nays 0, as follows:

He shall increase the monthly premium rate by the same percentage by which that primary insurance amount is increased when, by reason of the law in effect at the time the promulgation is made, it is so computed to apply to those individuals for the following November 1.", and

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, today we are reconsidering the question of providing insurance coverage for catastrophic costs to seniors in this Nation. Let me say at the outset that I believe there is a need for catastrophic health insurance in this country. Many seniors do not have adequate protection against catastrophic medical expenses, and we should make sure that they receive it.

Nonetheless, I believe that we should be governed by two major principles in deciding how to provide this coverage. Today, we have voted on many amendments. My vote on each of these proposals was cast in light of these principles.

First, I believe that the costs of a Federal program that benefits an important segment of our society should be shared by all of society—not just by the affected group. We do not ask only veterans to pay for veterans benefits; we do not ask only the disabled to pay for disability benefits; and we should not ask only senior citizens to fund Medicare benefits.

Second, I believe that we should not require people to pay for health care insurance that duplicates coverage which they already had.

In order to achieve the first principle of broad-based financing, I supported the amendment by Senators HARKIN and LEVIN to repeal the supplemental premium or surtax, and replace it with a more universal system of funding. This proposal would have corrected a basic inequity and anomalie of our current Tax Code. Right now, a single individual with a taxable income between $47,000 and $109,050, already pays a marginal tax rate of 33 percent. If that person makes more than $109,050, however, their marginal tax rate drops back down to 28 percent. This amendment would have evened out the so-called bubble, and ensured that the 33-percent rate would continue to apply for these higher incomes. This change would produce more than enough revenue to cover the funds lost by repealing the supplemental premium.

In order to achieve the principle that no one should be forced to pay for duplicative coverage, I supported the amendment by Senator BOB GRAHAM of Florida to make participation in the act voluntary. Many seniors have private insurance plans already covering some catastrophic expenses, and do not want or need the additional coverage offered by the act. Under Senator GRAHAM's amendment, any senior citizen who already has sufficient private insurance would have been allowed to opt out of the catastrophic program. This change would have met the principle of voluntariness, and avoided needless and costly duplication, while still preserving the financial integrity of the catastrophic program.

Unfortunately, the proposal by Senators HARKIN and LEVIN did not succeed, and the Senate refused to approve a broad-based funding plan. Similarly, the proposal by Senator GRAHAM failed, and the Senate refused to approve a truly voluntary program.

The next proposal before the Senate was the amendment offered by Senators ROTH and DANFORTH to repeal the catastrophic program. I voted for this amendment, because while I believe we need to provide catastrophic health insurance to those elderly who need it, I have said many times that had I been present, I would have voted against final passage of the Catastrophic Coverage Act. I oppose the current law both because it requires mandatory participation and because it is not broadly financed. Once the Senate defeated the Harkin-Levin and Graham amendments, it was clear that we could end up with a law that did not meet either test. Had the Roth-Danforth amendment been approved, I would then have begun working to provide catastrophic protection to those seniors who need it in a manner meeting the two principles outlined above. This amendment also failed, however.

Ultimately, I supported Senator MCCAIN's bill, because it was the best remaining option. First, it repealed the supplemental premium or surtax. In my view, this surtax represented the most troublesome and unfair element of the current act's financing approach. Second, Senator MCCAIN's amendment maintained a valuable package of benefits and coverage for those senior citizens who need it. Under Senator MCCAIN's proposal, we would still retain the important benefits for long-term hospitalization, protect against spousal impoverishment, provide coverage for mammography screenings, and provide some limited coverage for home health care and respite care. I consider this package to be the best and most valuable coverage which can be financed without a supplemental premium or a broader base of funding.

Mr. President, the McCain bill represents a substantial improvement over the Catastrophic Coverage Act as it was enacted last year. Nonetheless, it is far from perfect. It still relies on a system of senior only financing, and it is still a mandatory program. I supported this legislation because it was better than the alternative, but I believe that we can and should do better. I will continue to work toward that end in the months ahead.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I just want to take 30 seconds to congratulate the Senate. I think we are close to the House. We recognized the limits on how far we should go on this particular issue.

I particularly want to congratulate Senator MCCAIN and indicate for the record that I am not always in support of Senator MCCAIN's view, but I think he persisted and prevailed in an appropriate way. I congratulate him and the Democrats and Republicans who have been working together. They have achieved the result, I guess, many of us felt would be the result at the close of business this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair in his capacity as a Senator from the State of Iowa suggests the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—H.R. 2788

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate considers the conference report on the Interior appropriations bill, H.R. 2788, it be considered under the following time limitation: 1 hour equally divided on the conference report under the control of Senators BYRD and MCCLURE or their designees; 90 minutes equally divided on Senator Helms' amendment to amendment No. 153; I further ask unanimous consent that the vote on the conference report be stacked to occur immediately prior to the vote on or in relation to the Helms amendment; that there be 30 minutes for Senator GORTON to debate amendment No. 167; that the managers' time may be utilized either before or after adoption of the conference report; that no other floor amendments be in order; that Senators FOWLER and ADAMS each have up to 15 minutes of debate under their control.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MCCLURE. Mr. President, we have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ELEANOR SAYRE WRITES ON THE HELMS AMENDMENT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, there have been many eloquent and thoughtful analyses of the Helms amendment and its unwise attempt to restrict grants by the National Endowment for the Arts.

The Senate has devoted considerable attention to the issue and the Interior Appropriations Conference Committee members are to be commended for the diligence and sensitivity they have applied in addressing this issue.

Since the debate began, I have heard from a number of constituents on the subject of artistic expression. Many of them have expressed their strong concern over the chilling effect that the Helms amendment would have on the arts community.

One of the most eloquent letters I have received is from Eleanor Sayre, curator emeritus at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. She is the granddaughter of President Woodrow Wilson and I am pleased that leaders as knowledgeable and committed as Ms. Sayre have taken the time to be involved in this important debate. I ask unanimous consent that her letter may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS,
Boston, MA, August 4, 1989.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Russell Senate Office Building,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: As the granddaughter of Woodrow Wilson, I take the liberty of addressing you concerning the measure voted last week to prohibit Federal funds from being used to "promote, disseminate or produce obscene or indecent materials, including but not limited to depictions of sadomasochism, homoeroticism, the exploitation of children, or individuals engaged in sex acts . . .". It seems to me that the measure would have shocked my grandfather, for he would have foreseen that it would lead to the unconstitutional practice of the Congress doubling, in effect, as censors.

I suspect that this President would also have found the wording of the measure loose and ill-considered. This aspect of it I can address more authoritatively in my role as Curator Emeritus of the Department of Prints, Drawings and Photographs at the Museum of Fine Arts. Our collection, of world importance, consists of an estimated half-million European and American works of art spanning six centuries. Artists made drawings, woodcuts, engravings, etchings, lithographs, book illustrations of almost everything of concern to man. As a curator I was at times offered as a gift, or for purchase by the museum, material that would fall within the purview of the Senate measure. What, I then asked myself, was the artist's principal intent? Merely to titillate? Or to enable the world to see more acutely than it ordinarily does the depth and complexity of human emotions? Or to arouse awareness of something simpler, such as the beauty of complex forms?

There were two prerequisites for giving an equitable answer. I could not be like a former dean of a prestigious art school whose prurient mind made him view even the most earnest and naive drawings of naked, female models by students as too erotic to hang in his university gallery. And I had to be certain that I comprehended the work. Art is a language, or rather it consists of many languages that differ from region to region and undergo drastic changes as the centuries pass. It is all too easy to denigrate works of art in languages one does not know. Under the influence of Inquisition censorship, eighteenth-century Spanish officials caused paintings by Titian, Rubens and Dürer to be removed from the Royal Palace as obscene and all but succeeded in having them destroyed, never realizing that these very paintings constitute some of the world's greatest masterpieces; nineteenth-century Frenchmen thought Impressionist paintings appalling when they were first shown; and twentieth-century Nazis literally condemned all German Expressionist works as degenerate.

The satirical prints and drawings of Francisco Goya (1746–1828), in which he attacked the follies and vices he saw around him afford an excellent example of works that were understood at the time of their creation. Read in context in Goya's own day, his graphic work was perceived as profoundly moral. After his death these same works of art came to be viewed as fantasies or the work of a disturbed mind. Learning to read them again, we are discovering that his contemporaries were right.

An exhibition of paintings, drawings and prints, Goya and the Spirit of Enlightenment, just concluded a tour of museums in Madrid, Boston and New York. Over a million vistiors saw it. It was an extremely expensive venture because the valuation of the works of art was so high. What made it possible were an indemnity granted by the Federal Council on the Arts and the Humanities and a generous grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities, a federal agency. Two banks and the New York Stock Exchange also helped.

In Boston the general public saw material some of which the Senate measure would prohibit. They understood Goya's attacks on vice because the Museum of Fine Arts provided explanatory labels that helped them do so. Far from being offended (even by an explicit satire on the molestation of little boys by men), visitors were deeply moved by the morality of a great artist. A local clergyman urged his parishioners to spend time in the exhibition during Lent.

Rather than censoring such exhibitions as this, the Senate might better exert pressure to ensure that explanatory texts (such as labels) make the serious purpose of an artist intelligible to laymen. What is important is not the subject matter of art and literature in itself, but what the artists or author is saying.

Sincerely yours,

ELEANOR SAYRE,
Curator Emeritus.

HAPPY 90TH BIRTHDAY, IVO SPARKMAN

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise to bring to the attention of the U.S. Senate that today is the 90th birthday of Mrs. John J. Sparkman. Mrs. Sparkman is the widow of the late Senator John J. Sparkman. Ivo Sparkman is a great, gracious lady and many Members of the Senate, of course, remember her quite well. I spoke with her on the telephone and wished her a happy birthday today. She expressed to me the desire to let people know that she is doing fine and that she is in good health.

The city of Huntsville declared today as "Ivo Sparkman Day." She went to a luncheon, was quite chipper, and is in excellent health. I know that everyone in the Senate joins me in wishing her a happy birthday.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. GRASSLEY:

S. 1736. A bill to temporarily suspend the duty on mercuric oxide; to the Committee on Finance.

TEMPORARY DUTY SUSPENSION ON MERCURIC OXIDE

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to temporarily suspend the duty on mercuric oxide.

Red mercuric oxide is used in the manufacturing of batteries. Up until 6 years ago there were two domestic sources for this material. Unfortunately, both of these companies have stopped production. Now most of this product is imported from such countries as England, West Germany, Spain, and the People's Republic of China.

As we are all aware batteries are used in a variety of devices such as communications equipment, medical devices and many military applications. Since there is no current domestic source for mercuric oxide I believe this legislation should be categorized as noncontroversial. I am therefore hopeful that the Finance Committee will give this legislation consideration when they take up the miscellaneous tariff bills this year.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of this legislation be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1736

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MERCURIC OXIDE.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.28.25	Mercuric oxide (provided for in subheading 2825.90.60)...	Free	No change	No change	On or before 12/31/92".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendment made by this Act applies with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the date that is 15 days after the date of enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ (for himself and Mr. BURNS):

S. 1737. A bill to extend the Small Business Development Center Program; to the Committee on Small Business.

EXTENSION OF SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CENTER PROGRAM

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which will reauthorize the U.S. Small Business Administration's Small Business Development Center [SBDC] Program. The program is currently authorized until October 1, 1990; my bill will reauthorize SBDC's until October 1, 1995.

SBDC's are sponsored by the Small Business Administration [SBA] in partnership with State and local governments, the educational community, and the private sector. The centers provide one-stop assistance to small business. They provide counseling, training, and management and technical assistance to present and prospective small business owners. SBDC services are developed in cooperation with local SBA district offices to ensure that the SBDC's coordinate efforts, share information, and avoid duplication with other resources available throughout the State.

There are 53 SBDC's in 46 States. In each State there is a lead organization, endorsed by the Governor, which sponsors the SBDC and from which the statewide director manages the program. The lead organization coordinates program services offered to small businesses through a network of subcenters and satellite locations in each State. These subcenters are located at colleges, universities, community colleges, vocational schools, chambers of commerce or economic development corporations.

The lead center in my State of Minnesota is the Department of Trade and Economic Development. It has a variety of organizations serving as host organizations for SBDC subcenters. These include: The University of Minnesota-Duluth campus and the Extension Service Division; area vocational technical institutes; community colleages; area economic development offices; and a State legislature funded nonprofit organization specializing in high technology R&D.

SBDC assistance is specifically tailored to the local area and the needs of individual clients. In fact, the subcenter at the College of St. Thomas in St. Paul, MN, has an employee who speaks many Asian languages and dialects. He operates an Asian resource desk at the subcenter and provides great assistance to the large Asian population in the St. Paul area.

I would like to mention two examples of assistance provided by the Minnesota SBDC network. The Pine Technical College subcenter assisted a garment manufacturer whose sales had grown from $17,000 to $100,000 in 1 year. The client had borrowed small amounts from several different sources, and needed help in consolidating loans and purchasing equipment. The SBDC helped the client develop a business plan, establish a budget, and set priorities. This enabled the client to obtain financing for the necessary equipment from a local bank and from the central Minnesota initiative fund. The business now employs 21 people, and recorded $360,000 in sales volume during the first 6 months of 1989.

The Brainerd Technical College subcenter maintains an invention and innovation consultant whose services are available statewide. Recently, the subcenter helped a local pharmacist-inventor get his product tested by an officially recognized testing facility. This enabled him to market the product to a commercial and medical supply firm and obtain financing for further product development.

SBA provides 50 percent or less of the funding for the operation of each State SBDC. The applicant organization provides 50 percent or more of State program costs. These matching funds are provided by contributions from State legislatures, private sector foundations and grants, State and local chambers of commerce, State-chartered economic development corporations, public and private universities, vocational and technical schools, community colleges, and so forth. Increasingly, these matching funds are exceeding the required 50 percent matching share.

In addition to counseling, training and management and technical assistance, SBDC's also provide special programs and economic development activities. Among these are services to inventors with patentable products, international trade centers for export and import advice, business law information and guidance, procurement matching assistance, venture capital formation and small business incubators.

The SBDC's also make special efforts to reach members of minority groups, veterans, women, the handicapped, and other current or potential small business owners. They also provide assistance to small businesses applying for small business innovation and research grants.

In 1988, approximately 80,000 small business owners and prospective owners were counseled through SBDC's. The Minnesota SBDC and its subcenters provided counseling and training to 15,000 businesses; nearly 80 percent of these businesses were outside the Twin Cities metropolitan area.

Mr. President, small business development centers provide a great deal of assistance to existing and prospective small businesses. It is necessary to reauthorize this program. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.●

By Mr. HATFIELD (for himself and Mr. PACKWOOD):

S. 1738. A bill to convey certain Oregon and California Railroad grant lands in Jospehine County, OR, to the Rogue Community College District, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LAND TO ROGUE COMMUNITY COLLEGE DISTRICT

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, today Senator PACKWOOD and I are introducing a bill that conveys a small parcel of Oregon and California Railroad grant land—so-called O&C land—to the Rogue Community College in Josephine County, OR. Our collleague in the Oregon congressnional delegation, Congressman BOB SMITH, is introducing an identical version today in the House of Representatives.

Located on the parcel of land identified in the bill are a number of buildings that belong to Rogue Community College, an educational institution that is important to both the southern Oregon region and our entire State. Since acquiring those facilities in 1971, the college has attempted to gain title to the land on which they sit. Currently, they are leasing the property from the Bureau of Land Management [BLM].

It was originally thought that this transfer could occur through the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act [FPASA]. Under those provisions, the property would be transferred to the General Services Administration [GSA], deemed surplus to the Federal Government, and sold to the college.

While this scenario was supported by the BLM, the GSA as unable to implement the transfer and sale due to the property's special designation as O&C land. Because O&C lands are reacquired public domain lands, they cannot be disposed of under current law. Therefore, conveying title to the land occupied by the college requires the legislative solution which we are introducing today.

Mr. President, in general, the primary use of O&C land is timber management. That practice benefits the local countries economically be providing timber to local mills and by a special revenue sharing arrangement based on timber sale receipts. However, the land now occupied by the Rogue Community College and identified in this bill has been certified by the BLM as incapable of reforestation. Accordingly, its transfer to the college would in no way diminish the producutivity of O&C lands.

In fact, I believe just the opposite would occur. By allowing the college the certainty to plan for expansion, this transfer would enhance what I believe is a very high value use of that particular parcel—promoting educational excellence.

As some of my colleagues may remember, Senator PACKWOOD and I introduced this same bill last year during the second session of the 100th Congress. Unfortunately, there was not time for the Senate to complete action on that legislation. It is my hope during this new Congress that both the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, of which I am a member, and the entire Senate will consider and approve this legislation in an expeditious manner. Rogue Community College and its fine president, Dr. Harvey Bennett, deserve to see their facilities secured for future growth and expansion.

Mr. President, I ask that a memorandum prepared by the Department of the Interior's Pacific Northwest Regional Solicitor explaining the history of this issue and a copy of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1738

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONVEYANCE OF LAND.

(a) CONVEYANCE.—Subject to section 2, the Secretary of the Interior shall convey, without consideration, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to land described in subsection (b) to the Rogue Community College District in Josephine County, Oregon (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "District").

(b) LAND DESCRIPTION.—The land referred to in subsection (a) is land in Josephine County, Oregon, described as Township 36 South, Range 6 West, W.M., Section 27.

SEC. 2. LIMITATIONS ON CONVEYANCE.

The conveyance authorized by section 1(a) is subject to the following limitations:

(1) ENCUMBRANCES.—Such conveyance shall be subject to all encumbrances on the land existing as of the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) MINERAL RIGHTS.—Such conveyance shall reserve to the United States all minerals in the land, including geothermal rights, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the minerals and geothermal resources.

(3) RIGHT OF WAY FOR DITCHES AND CANALS.—Such conveyance shall be subject to the proviso in the fourth undesignated paragraph under the caption entitled "United States Geological Survey" in the first section of the Act of August 30, 1890 (26 Stat. 371, 391) (43 U.S.C. 945).

(4) REVERSIONARY INTEREST.—Such conveyance shall be subject to a reversionary interest in the land described in section 1(b) to be held by the United States. If such land ceases to be used for educational purposes, all right, title, and interest in and to such land shall revert to the United States and shall be identified, classified, and managed as Oregon and California Railroad Grant Lands.

SEC. 3. PURCHASE OF LAND AFTER REVERSION.

If the land described in section 1(b) should revert to the United States by operation of paragraph (4) of section 2, the District may acquire such land from the United States, during the two year period ending after the date the land has reverted to the United States, by quitclaim deed, upon application to the Secretary of the Interior and the payment of the fair market value of such land and any improvements thereon.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT,
Portland, OR, December 7, 1987.

HON. MARK O. HATFIELD,
United States Senator, Yamhill, Portland, OR.

DEAR SENATOR HATFIELD: This is in response to a request for drafting service for proposed legislation that would accomplish the transfer of O&C land presently leased to the Rogue Valley Area Education District.

Enclosed is a draft of legislative language that would accomplish the transfer, but yet protect any other party having valid existing rights at the time of transfer. The draft also contains language that would automatically return title to the United States in the event that the property would be used for purposes other than education and/or conveyed to another party without written approval from the Secretary of the Interior.

Additionally, and for your information, we are enclosing a memorandum prepared by the Office of the Regional Solicitor, Pacific Northwest Region which clearly and concisely sets out the entire history of the case along with the legal interpretation of the issues at that point in time.

If we can be of any further assistance in this matter, please let me know.

Sincerely,

/s/ PAUL M. VETTERICK, FOR CHARLES W. LUSCHER,
State Director.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Portland, OR, April 16, 1984.

To: Oregon State Director, Bureau of Land Management (943.1).

From: Office of the Regional Solicitor, Pacific Northwest Region.

Subject: Disposal of O&C Land to Rogue Community College.

Over the past three years the BLM has been negotiating with the General Services Administration as to the possible disposal of the O&C land on which the Rogue Community College is operating its college under a twenty-five year lease. However, the GSA has continued to question its authority to accept this property under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, (40 U.S.C. § 471 et seq), hereinafter referred to as the FPASA, because of its special status as O&C land. You have requested that our office examine the issues involved and provide you our legal opinion on this question. Based upon a careful examination of the legislation history of the O&C lands and the provisions of the FPASA we have concluded that O&C lands are reacquired public domain land which have been reserved for special purposes and that they cannot be disposed of under the FPASA.

To assist in understanding this matter it is helpful to outline the circumstances leading to the present situation.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

The land in question consists of the SW¼ NE¼ of section 27, T. 36 S. R. 6. W. Willamette Meridian. It is located approximately 2 ½ miles southwest of the city of Grants Pass, Oregon, which is the county seat of Josephine County. The land was originally part of the public domain which was granted to the Oregon and California Railroad Company in aid of the construction of a railroad from Portland to the Oregon—California boundary by the Act of July 25, 1866 (14 Stat. 239). Because of violations of the terms of the grant, the Congress revested all unsold lands by the Act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218).

In 1965 and 1966 the Fort Vannoy Job Corps Center was constructed on the area. It consisted of approximately 36 buildings and sheds, having an estimated value in 1971 of approximately $730,000. According to BLM records no merchantable timber remains on the area. The camp was terminated in 1968 and the Rogue Community College initiated proceedings to acquire the site and its buildings. The buildings were surplused to the General Services Administration by the BLM under the FPASA and subsequently transferred to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, the Secretary of the Interior may convey, without consideration, to Rogue Valley Area Education District the following described land in Josephine County, Oregon: Section 27, SW¼NE¼ T. 36 S., R. 6 W., W.M. Said conveyance shall be subject to all existing encumbrances, shall reserve to the United States the mineral estate, including geothermal resources, and be made subject to the Act of August 30, 1890, 26 Stat. 391, 43 U.S.C. 945. Provided, that the Rogue Valley Area Education District shall not transfer said property, nor use said property for any purpose other than educational purposes without the written approval of the Secretary of the Interior. Transfer or change in use of said property without written approval from the Secretary of the Interior will automatically defeat the title to said property and will revest the same in the name of the United States and will be so noted on the records of the United States as Oregon and California Railroad Grant Lands. Provided further, that upon application for transfer or change in use and approval thereof and the payment of fair market value of the land and improvements, Rogue Valley Area Education District may transfer said property or change the use as approved by the Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

By an Agreement of Sale with HEW dated August 19, 1971, the Rogue Community College acquired the buildings on this land without cost. In accordance with the terms of the agreement the college earned a public benefit allowance for the value of the buildings by agreeing to use the property for educational purposes for 15 years. Concurrent with the sale of the buildings, the BLM leased the underlying land to the college for a period of 10 years under the terms of a Recreational or Public Purpose Lease dated July 1, 1971, for a lump sum payment of $100. The land was leased rather than sold under the R&PP Act because that act specifically provides that O&C land may only be leased. (43 U.S.C. § 869(c)) In 1973, in response to a Congressional inquiry, the Medford District Manager advised the Oregon State Director that because O&C land was involved it could not be disposed of through GSA under the FPASA and would therefore have to be exchanged or sold through special legislation. The possibilities of an exchange were explored at that time by the parties but were never fully pursued because of the complexities involved and time which this would take.

The files of the BLM also contain a copy of a memorandum of some interest from the Oregon State Director to the Director dated April 18, 1973, which, however, was apparently never sent. This draft memorandum indicates that the BLM knew of no precedent for the disposal of O&C lands by the GSA and that the Director's policy at the time the site was leased to the college was to limit disposal to a lease under the R&PP Act. While the statement sheds no light on whether the land could be legally disposed of under the FPASA, it does point out the important policy questions involved if a disposal of fee title under that act were to be pursued.

Between 1973 and 1979 no further activities were reported concerning the acquisition of the property by the college. However, approval was given by the BLM for the construction of several new school buildings.

In 1979 inquiries were again made by the college through Senator Hatfield as to the means by which the college could acquire title to the site. In response to this inquiry the Oregon State Director advised Senator Hatfield in a letter dated November 21, 1979, that sale for fair market value under FLPMA or land exchanges were the only two methods by which the college could acquire the title to the property under existing law. There is some confusion as to whether this response was intended to refer only to statutes under which the BLM operates directly or was also intended to imply that disposal by the GSA under the FPASA was not possible.

After learning that the Josephine County Commissioners and the Association of O&C Counties were agreeable to a disposal of the land through the GSA, the Oregon State Director advised the Medford District Manager on March 13, 1980, to proceed with disposal if the college formally requested such disposal and could demonstrate that the present lease was inadequate. The college was so advised and on April 24, 1980, formally requested the transfer of title.

Following the preparation of the necessary environmental analysis and land report, the District Manager reported the property available for disposal on August 4, 1980. The report was approved by the State Director and forwarded to the Denver Service Center on September 8, 1980, with the recommendation that the land be declared surplus, reported to GSA for disposal and conveyed to the college. On January 6, 1981, the Denver Service Center reported the land to GSA. Additional information was provided to GSA on February 26, 1981, including the fact that because of its isolated character and developments on the land it was uneconomical to manager and could not be restored to timber growth.

By a letter dated April 13, 1981, the GSA advised the BLM that it could not dispose of O&C land under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 for the following reasons: Because of the O&C land designation, we sought advice from our Regional counsel. GSA can accept excess property for disposal under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended. However, counsel advises that the term 'property' does not include land in the public domain. It has been held that "O&C" lands are a part of the public domain and as such may not be disposed of by GSA under its authorities. Accordingly, we are returning your report of excess.

Discussion of the letter with the GSA has revealed that it was based upon the informal oral advice of the attorneys for the GSA and that no written opinions were prepared.

On May 20, 1981, the BLM resubmitted its excess land report to the GSA and advised that "property" which can be disposed of by GSA "includes lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain when such lands have been determined by the Secretary of Interior, with concurrence of the Administration of GSA, [as] not suitable for return to the public domain because they have been substantially changed by improvements or otherwise." The resubmission then indicated that the BLM had determined that the lands in question were unsuitable for return to the public domain. This document notes that the matter had been discussed by the Solicitor's Office in Washington with the GSA and that it was felt that the initial application had been returned by the GSA because it failed to state that the lands in question were unsuitable for return to the public domain.

The GSA responded to this resubmission again questioning whether it had any authority to dispose of O&C land under the Federal Property and Administration Services Act, and that in any event if they lands were transferred to GSA for disposal there could be no assurance that they would be retransferred to the Rogue Community College.

In an attempt to resolve this impasse, our office wrote to the GSA on October 16, 1981, indicating that while we were reluctant to advise GSA as to its authorities, it appeared that GSA had authority to dispose of all property which is excess to the needs of a federal agency unless the property falls within one of the specific exemptions cited in the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act. We noted that: The O&C lands are portions of public domain which were granted to the Oregon and California Railroad Company in aid of the construction of a railroad. Upon violation of certain covenants in the grant, the lands were revested to the United States by an act of Congress on June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218). If such O&C lands fall within any of the exceptions which deprive the GSA of disposal authority, this would appear to be the exception for "lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain." However, there is specifically excluded from this exception "lands or portions of lands so withdrawn or reserved which the Secretary of the Interior, with the concurrence of the Administrator, determines are not suitable for return to the public domain for disposition under the general public land laws because such lands are substantially changed in character by improvements or otherwise."

It was under this exclusion to the public domain exception that BLM reported the Rogue Community College site to the GSA. We also outlined the means by which the site could be transferred to the Department of Education and thence to the college if the GSA were willing to accept the property as surplus.

In response to the comments from our office the GSA advised by a letter dated November 4, 1981, that it would only consider the acceptance of the land if it received:

1. An unqualified certification that the BLM may properly, within its authorities and existing statutes, withdraw the lands at Grants Pass from their O&C classification, determine them to be "property" as defined under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, and report them excess to GSA for disposal.

2. A formal land determination from the BLM that the O&C lands in question, or a portion of them, are unsuitable for retention in the public domain together with a request that GSA concur in that determination.

Certain additional information was also requested from the BLM.

Because of the delays in disposing of this property to the colleage it became necessary to extend the existing lease. On November 5, 1981, a new 25 year lease was offered to the college at a rental of $50 per five year period. This offer was accepted by the college and the new lease was approved by the BLM on November 19, 1981.

LEGAL ANALYSIS

The O&C Lands were originally portions of public domain which were granted in aid of the construction of a railroad. Their subsequent history up to the time of revestment has been succinctly set forth as follows by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Skoko v. Andrus, 638 F.2d 1154 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. den. 444 U.S. 927, 62 L.Ed.2d 183 (1979):

Between 1866 and 1870, Congress granted almost 4,000,000 acres of land to the Oregon & California Railroad to promote the construction of a railroad from Portland, Oregon, to the California Border. The granting statutes contained a proviso, "That the lands granted . . . shall be sold to actual settlers only in quantities not greater than one quarter section to one purchaser, and for a price not exceeding two dollars and fifty cents per acre." Oregon & California Railroad Co. v. United States, 1915, 238 U.S. 393, 403, 35 S. Ct. 908, 913, 59 L.Ed. 1360.

The railroad was built, but the proviso was violated. As a result, Congress, by joint resolution, directed the Attorney General to enforce the proviso. 35 Stat. 571 (1908). In the ensuing action, supra, the Court held that the proviso was a covenant, not a condition. It therefore refused to forefeit the lands still owned by the railroad, ordered the covenant enforced, and gave Congress "a reasonable time" to frame the remedy. Id, at 438-39, 35 S. Ct. 908.

Congress responded with the Chamberlain-Ferris Revestment Act of June 9, 1916, 39 Stat. 218, which declared all undisposed of grant lands "hereby, revested in the United States." 39 Stat. 219.

In 1912 while federal court actions were in progress to forefeit these lands, the Congress passed what has been called the "Forgiveness Act" (Act of August 29, 1912, 37 Stat. 320). This act permitted the government to compromise with and issue patents to those persons who had purchased O&C lands from the railroad grantee. It also provided in Section 2 of the Act: That none of the lands reverting to the United States by virtue of any right of forefeiture thereto as aforesaid shall be or become subject to entry under any of the public-land laws of the United States, or to the initiation of any right whatever under any of the public-land laws of the United States.

This reflects the intent of Congress that upon any successful forfeiture action the forfeited lands would not be directly disposed of under the homestead, lieu land or other statutes which were then the subject of such controversy.

The status of any reacquired O&C lands was again considered by Congress during the hearings leading up to the Revestment Act of June 9, 1916, (39 Stat. 218). As reported at page 116 of the Hearings Before the Committee on the Public Lands, House of Representatives on H.J. Res. 58, 64th Cong., 1st Sess., February 24, 1916, it was indicated by C. J. Smyth, Special Assistant to the Attorney General that the above quoted provision of the Foregiveness Act of 1912 would have no application where the Congress rather than the courts provided for the revestment of the O&C lands to the United States. He concluded that: It might be (sic) well be said that if the title to these lands was resumed by the United States without any provision for their future disposition they would become subject to the public-land laws now in existence. In fact, I do not see at this moment how that conclusion could be escaped. If, therefore, Congress concludes to revest the title in the United States, it ought at the same time to provide for some disposition of the lands.

In order to avoid subjecting the revested O&C lands to the general public-land laws then in effect, Congress specifically provided under the terms of the Act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218) for the disposition of these lands. The act provides that the lands be classified into (1) power-site lands, (2) timber lands, or (3) agricultural lands; that the timber on the lands should be sold for cash; and that the non-mineral agricultural lands should be subject to entry and sale under the homestead laws. It further provided that rights of way could be granted across such lands in the same manner as for public lands and that mineral lands (other than those suitable for power sites) were subject to entry and disposition under the mineral-land law of the United States.

This statute was later amended and supplemented by the O&C Act of August 28, 1937, (43 U.S.C. § 1181a) which provided that lands classified as timber lands be managed for timber production in support of local communities and industries. It also provided for the reclassification of lands more suitable for agricultural use.

Based upon the special history of the O&C lands and the above statutes, the Department of the Interior has on several occasions issued opinions which concluded that Congress has set aside the O&C lands for the purposes specified in the 1916 and 1937 acts and that they may not be used or disposed of for purposes or by means not provided for by the Congress.

In an opinion dated March 9, 1940, the Solicitor advised the Secretary that: [C]ongress has specifically provided a plan of utilization of the Oregon and California Railroad revested lands. This plan among other things involves the disposal of lands and timber and the distribution of the moneys received from such disposition. It must be concluded that Congress has set aside the lands for the specified purpose.

In view of this the Solicitor concluded that a presidential withdrawal of the O&C lands as an addition to the Oregon Caves National Monument was not authorized since it would conflict with the requirements of the O&C Act.

One year later on August 25, 1941, the Assistant Secretary issued an instruction advising that the mining laws were in conflict with the timber management requirements of the O&C Act and therefore did not apply to such lands. (57 ID 365) In reaching this conclusion the Assistant Secretary noted that the O&C Act required the permanent retention of lands classified for forest management and their management for timber production and other purposes specifically stated in the act. He also noted that it was a well established policy of the Congress to reserve lands from disposal except where there existed express statutory provisions for their disposition citing the case of United States v. Sweet, 245 U.S. 563, 62 L.Ed 473 (1918).

The same conclusions as to the special status of the O&C lands was reached by the Associate Solicitor for the Division of Public Lands in an opinion to the Director of the BLM dated October 7, 1966. (M-36697) Here the Associated Solicitor stated that: Congress has in a special manner sought to preserve the interests of the United States, and of the beneficiary counties, in the O&C lands and in the valuable timber resources they contain. Clearly, these lands have a special status which sets them separate and apart from the public lands of the United States. In other words, the O&C lands have been "appropriated" by the Congress.

Since such lands are appropriated for special designated purposes the Associate Solicitor concluded that they were not available as Indian Allotments under 25 U.S.C. § 334.

The care which the Congress has continued to assert concerning the preservation of the O&C lands as a special category of appropriate land has already been alluded to with respect to the Recreation and Public Purpose Act (43 U.S.C. § 869(c)) which provides for the lease but not the sale of O&C lands. More recently with the passage of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (FLPMA) the Congress has provided at 43 U.S.C. § 701(b) that any provisions of FLPMA which are inconsistent with timber management or revenue disposal provisions of the O&C Act must give way.

Given the historical and legal background of the O&C land, the question remains as to how these lands are to be classified and managed with respect to the Federal Property and Administrative Service Act of 1949, as amended, 40 U.S.C. § 471 et seq. This statute provides for the disposal of certain surplus property of the United States by the General Services Administration. The property subject to such disposal is defined in the statute as follows: The term "property" means any interest in property except (1) the public domain; lands reserved or dedicated for national forest or national park purposes; minerals in lands or portions of lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain which the Secretary of the Interior determines are suitable for disposition under the public land mining and mineral leasing laws; and lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain except lands or portions of lands so withdrawn or reserved which the Secretary of the Interior, with the concurrence of the Administrator, determines are not suitable for return to the public domain for disposition under the general public-land laws because such lands are substantially changed in character by improvements or otherwise; (2) naval vessels of the following categories: Battleships, cruisers, aircraft carriers, destroyers, and submarines; and (3) records of the Federal Government. (40 U.S.C. § 472(d))

In order to understand the place of the O&C lands within this definition it is helpful to examine the legislative history of the FPASA. In Senate Report 857 which accompanied the bill which amended the FPASA to its present general form in 1958, the term "public domain" was described as: Original public domain lands which have never left Federal ownership; also, lands in Federal ownership which were obtained by the Government in exchange for public lands or for timber on such lands; also, original public domain lands which have reverted to Federal ownership through operation of the public-land laws. S. Rep. No. 857, 85th Cong. 2nd Sess. (1957), reprinted in 1958 U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News 2227, 2233.

Lands withdrawn or reserved from the public domain are further described in Senate Report 857 as follows: Two categories of federally owned real property may be said to fall within the term "reservations." Original public domain lands—lands to which title has been in the United States since acquisition—and withdrawn to a greater or lesser degree from the general operation of the public-land laws relating to settlement, entry, location, and sale, are "Federal reservations." So, too, are lands acquired or reacquired by the United States by purchase, condemnation, or by exchange for such purchased, condemned, or donated lands or for interests in or on such lands, and held for a specific public purpose. The term "withdraw" is used interchangeably with the term "reserve" to describe the statutory or administrative action which restricts or segregates a designated area of Federal real property from the full operation of the public-land laws relating to settlement, entry, location, and sales, which action holds them for a specific—and usually limited—public purpose.

Examples of reservations include: national forest reserve lands; national parks, monuments, and other units of the national park system; fish and wildlife refuges; petroleum, oil shale, coal, and other mineral reserves; recreation and wilderness areas; reclamation and power withdrawals or reservations; military reservations, and similar areas, all of which are held by some Federal agency for specified public purposes, and all of which may be created wholly from reserved original public domain lands, wholly from acquired or reacquired lands, or from portions of both. Other examples of Federal reservations, frequently created wholly from acquired lands, are post-office sites, weather stations, immigration and customs facilities, lighthouses, Federal courthouse sites, and the like. U.S. Code Cong. & Ad. News, supra, at 2233.

The recognition which Congress gave to the fact that upon revestment the O&C lands could be disposed of as any other public domain lands unless certain reservations were enacted has already been described with reference to the Forgiveness Act of 1912 and the Revestment Act of June 9, 1916. This taken together with the above description of the terms contained in the FPASA, makes it is clear that the O&C lands are reacquired public domain lands which have been reserved for those special purposes described in such statutes as the 1916 Revestment Act and the August 28, 1937 O&C Act (43 U.S.C. § 1181a et seq.) Because of their special reserved status they can only be disposed of in accordance with the mandate of Congress.

Such O&C lands can be sold for their fair market price in accordance with 43 U.S.C. § 203 so long as such sales would not be inconsistent with the timber management or revenue disposal provisions of the O&C Act as required by 43 U.S.C. § 701(b). Such lands can also be exchanged in accordance with 43 U.S.C. § 206. They can be leased but not sold in accordance with the Recreation or Public Purposes Act (43 U.S.C. § 869(c)). As reacquired public domain lands which have been reserved by Congress for a special purpose, the O&C lands do not fall within the definition of "property" as that term is used in the FPASA. While we indicated in our letter to the GSA on October 16, 1981, that lands reserved from the public domain which the Secretary of the Interior determined were not suitable for return to the public domain because of substantial changes in character by improvements could be disposed of under the FPASA, the present analysis of the legislature history of the O&C land makes it clear that since the Secretary has, in any event, no authority to return parcels of O&C land to the public domain, this provision of the FPASA is also inapplicable to the O&C lands. As noted earlier with respect to the attempted withdrawal of O&C lands as an addition to the Oregon Caves National Monument, only Congress can provide for the means by which the O&C lands may be disposed of. Therefore it is our opinion that without new legislation it will not be possible to exchange or sell these lands for less than their fair market value.

The suggestion has also been made that it might be possible for the FLM to dispose of the lands on which the Rogue Community College is located under 42 U.S.C. § 2704. That statute provides that: Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity shall establish procedures and make arrangements which are designed to assure that facilities and equipment at Job Corps centers which are being discontinued will, where feasible, be made available for use by State or Federal agencies and other public or private agencies, institutions, and organizations with satisfactory arrangements for utilizing such facilities and equipment for conducting programs, especially those providing opportunities for low-income disadvantaged youth, including, without limitation—

(1) special remedial programs;

(2) summer youth programs;

(3) exemplary vocational preparation and training programs;

(4) cultural enrichment programs, including music, the arts, and the humanities;

(5) training programs designed to improve the qualifications of educational personnel, including instructors in vocational educational programs; and

(6) youth conservation work and other conservation programs.

We do not believe the statute has any application to the present situation for a number of reasons. First, the Act relates to "facilities and equipment" only. There is no indication that Congress intended that it would provide the basis for the disposal of the title to federal land. Further, the statute merely provides that such "facilities and equipment" be made available for use by others, not that title passed. It also directs that such use be for special programs for disadvantaged youth, a purpose which at best may only make up a part of the program of education presently being offered by the Rogue Community College. In any event, in view of the specific Congressional mandate which has been laid down for the management of O&C lands it would be extremely difficult to imply a different and inconsistent use for the land on the basis of such a vaguely worded statute. In addition, the fact that the statute speaks in terms of Job Corps centers which are being discontinued appears to have little bearing upon a center which was discontinued in 1968, more than fifteen years ago and whose "facilities and equipment" were disposed of to the Community College under other statutory authority in 1971.

If we may be of further assistance in this matter please let us know. Your case file is returned herewith.

By Mr. HARKIN:

S. 1739. A bill to establish within the Department of Health and Human Services a permanent Federal Council on Nutrition and Health, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

NUTRITION AND HEALTH ACT

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Nutrition and Health Act of 1989. This legislation will serve a key role in promoting the health of our citizens by establishing a central clearinghouse and focal point for current scientific information on the connection between nutrition and health.

Mr. President, few issues interest Americans as much as their personal health. That is true of the Members of the Senate and it's true of our families and our constituents. Health care costs are spiraling out of control in our Nation, stretching the budgets of the Federal Government, our State and local governments, employees and our individual families. We are all keenly aware of the need to restrain health care costs and have attempted to do so through a variety of means.

One of the most meaningful ways to restrain health care costs is by preventing the need for health care in the first place. Obviously, this is easier said than done. The human body is a complex entity that is only imperfectly understood by the best of us. Our knowledge of the causes of disease and the prevention of disease is increasing exponentially and yet we have only scratched the surface of understanding disease and the best methods for maintaining sound health.

Over the last 20 years, we have begun to understand, slowly, that nutrition is connected to health. What we eat and how we live has some causal connection to our chances of contracting certain diseases or adverse health conditions. As an example, the role of cholesterol in heart disease has become much more clearly understood in recent years and the role of diet in controlling cholesterol has also become better understood. Many of us have changed our lifestyles in response to this new information.

These new thoughts were discussed at the White House Conference on Food and Nutrition in 1969. Then, in 1974, the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs developed an extensive report on a number of aspects of nutrition and the role it plays not only in our individual lives, but in the health and productivity of our Nation. Our colleagues, Senators KENNEDY, DOLE, and CRANSTON served on that important committee which has made such a positive contribution to our Nation's understanding of the role and benefits of good nutrition.

More recently, in 1989, the Surgeon General of the United States issued his first report on nutrition and health which stated clearly that 5 of the 10 leading causes of death among Americans could be reduced through improved diet, nutrition, and life styles. The No. 1 cause of death in America is heart disease. It is responsible for more than 1 million deaths annually and costs Americans more than $60 billion annually. Most of those afflicted with this disease are unaware that it is directly related to their diets.

Earlier this year, the National Research Council issued a 3-year study entitled "Diet and Health: Implications for Reducing Chronic Disease Risk" which reviewed current nutrition research and further documented the connection between nutrition and the incidence of certain diseases and adverse health conditions. In addition, the NRC study contained a 6-page list of the existing gaps in our scientific knowledge in this important area. I must assume that this in only a partial list of what we do not know about the connection between nutrition and the incidence of certain diseases and adverse health conditions.

Mr. President, the American public is increasingly aware of and interested in good nutrition. Many of us in this Chamber have changed our dietary habits over the last few years in response to new information on nutrition. Our agricultural community and food processors are finding new improved methods of producing our foods and commodities in response to new information in this area. But all of us share a common problem: What nutrition information do we believe and where can we find solid information on nutrition?

Each year, the Federal Government spends over $300 million on nutrition research, but the information from that research and other nutrition research that is ongoing in this country and abroad is not always easy to locate.

The participants in the 1969 White House Conference on Food and Nutrition discussed the need "to expand the information about foods and nutrition that is available to the consumers." They found that "there is no central repository for nutrition data in the United States" and called for a "nutrition archive or data bank" to be established in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, which is now, of course, the Department of Health and Human Services.

Many of the observations made by the 1969 White House Conference were repeated in the 1974 report of the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs. The Select Committee found that the "quality of the Government's information on the status of nutrition and health is fragmentary, partial, improvised and unreliable," with policymakers unable to obtain "objective answers" to questions concerning the relationship betwwen nutrition and health. The committee found that there was an inadequate exchange of information on nutrition among research groups and noted a number of gaps in our base of knowledge. Finally, the Senate Select Committee recommended the establishment of a "nonpartisan publicly supported agency whose purpose it would be to collect, evaluate and disseminate information on healthful nutrition to the public."

The legislation that I am introducing today proposes one approach for addressing the need that was identified in 1969, in 1974 and, I believe, remains today: the need to gather in one place all the currently available scientific research into the connection between nutrition and health.

The Nutrition and Health Act of 1989 would establish a Federal Council on Nutrition and Health. The Council's mission will be to assemble all currently available nutrition research from our country and foreign countries, to identify and monitor the progress of ongoing research, and identify, where possible, areas where there exist gaps in our current knowledge. The Council will retain this information in retrievable and understandable form.

Mr. President, it also is important to understand the role the Council will not play. The Council will not make policy. The Council, and this legislation, will not take from any existing Federal agency any enforcement or policymaking authority in the area of nutrition and health. Rather, the Council will attempt to gather the information that can be used by others in the development of policy; that can be used by food companies and others in making their case to policymakers; that can be used by the media in communicating about nutrition and health; and, most importantly, that can be used by American consumers in making their individual choices about nutrition and health.

Mr. President, this Congress has the opportunity to make real strides in the area of nutrition. Our colleague from New Mexico, Mr. BINGAMAN, is leading an ongoing initiative that many of us support in the area of nutrition. The National Nutrition Monitoring legislation will coordinate current Federal surveys regarding the Federal Government's recommendations regarding nutrition. Our colleagues from Ohio and Rhode Island, Mr. METZENBAUM and Mr. CHAFEE, have introduced legislation that calls for changes in the labels on food packages. The purpose of this initiative is to provide sufficient information upon which the consuming public can select products of their own choosing.

The legislation I propose today provides an important and related third initiative in the nutrition arena. The choice of diet by American consumers and good public policy in the area of nutrition must be based on competent scientific information—information which is often hard to locate today. The proposed Federal Council on Nutrition and Health will gather the information and make it available for use by policymakers, consumers, food companies, agriculture, researchers, and the media.

Finally, Mr. President, I want to emphasize that my objective is to create a clearinghouse and increased focus for scientific information in the area of nutrition and health. A clearinghouse of the dimensions envisioned in this legislation does not exist today, although several existing agencies of the Federal Government have portions of this information gathered and could, perhaps, be expanded to provide this function. If during the coming legislative process it becomes clear that there is a better approach to achieve the clearinghouse function, then I am prepared to modify this legislation to adopt that better approach. My sole objective—an objective which I believe each of us share—is to provide an economical and efficient source of information regarding nutrition and health for use by the American people.

Mr. President, I encourage my colleagues to join me in this important initiative and ask that the Nutrition and Health Act of 1989 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1739

(3) citizens often receive conflicting and confusing messages about nutrition and the relationship of nutrition of health;

(4) increased attention to good nutrition and proper personal choices about nutrition will result in the improved health of citizens and reduced health care expenditures in the future by Federal, State, and local governments as well as by individual citizens;

(5) the information base of the Nation concerning nutrition and health is fragmentary, often difficult to identify, and includes significant gaps in knowledge concerning the relationship between nutrition and the occurrence of certain diseases and adverse health conditions and

(6) the general knowledge of and practice of good nutrition by citizens would be enhanced by an increased focus at the Federal level on the identification and dissemination of sound information on the relationship between nutrition and health and the gaps in knowledge that require additional research and attention.

(b) PURPOSE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The purpose of this Act is to establish within the Department of Health and Human Services a Federal Council on Nutrition and Health that will assemble the existing information on the relationship between nutrition and human health, monitor the progress of ongoing research, identify the aspects of the relationship between nutrition and health that require additional research, maintain the base of information in an understandable and retrievable fashion, and serve as a clearinghouse for information on the relationship between nutrition and human health.

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Mr. FORD):

S. 1740. A bill to establish a research and demonstration program to promote cofiring of natural gas and coal in certain boilers, to provide Federal funding and tax incentives to carry out the program and to clarify the status of cofired electric utility or industrial boilers for purposes of new source performance standards; to the Committee on Finance.

COFIRING PROMOTION ACT

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise on behalf of Senator FORD and myself to introduce the Cofiring Promotion Act of 1989, legislation that will provide incentives for the demonstration and deployment of natural gas cofiring technologies.

Natural gas is our Nation's cleanest fossil fuel. Its combustion emits virtually no particulates, sulfur oxides, or reactive hydrocarbons, and it produces far lower emissions of nitrogen oxides per unit of energy than oil or coal. Natural gas produces only about half as much carbon dioxide per unit of energy as coal. What this adds up to is that natural gas can play an important part in achieving the emissions reductions that will be required when the Congress reauthorizes the Clean Air Act.

Cofiring refers to burning natural gas and coal together in the primary combustion zone of the same boiler. Basic natural gas cofiring involves the injection of natural gas with pulverized coal into the primary combustion zone of a boiler. Since natural gas contains virtually no sulfur or nitrogen, its substitution for a certain percentage of coal will naturally reduce emissions of sulfur dioxide [SO_2] and oxides of nitrogen [NO_x]. These two air pollutants are the precursors of acid rain. Tests have indicated that cofiring is potentially one of the most cost-effective ways to reduce SO_2 and NO_x emissions.

Duquesne Light Co., Consolidated Natural Gas Co., and the Gas Research Institute recently completed a cofiring demonstration at Duquesne's Cheswick powerplant, north of Pittsburgh. The demonstration program documented a 25 percent reduction of NO_x emissions using 6 to 10 percent natural gas cofiring. The program also documented greater than proportional reductions of SO_2 emissions under certain operating conditions. Clearly, this technology is worth pursuing.

In addition to SO_2 and NO_x emissions reductions, cofiring offers other advantages. First, cofiring offers a substantial number of operating flexibilities and efficiencies for electric utility and industrial coal plants and can help old plants operate at or near their rated capacities. Second, using natural gas in coal boilers can widen the range of coals that can be burned. Third, all of this can be accomplished at a very low capital cost and with virtually no technological risk.

In the context of the clean air debate, basic cofiring can be an important bridge technology. Basic cofiring promises to be a cost-effective means for electric utilities with older coal burning plants to achieve emissions reductions during the period preceding the commercial availability of innovative clean coal technologies. Without cofiring, electric utilities will be left with the choice between phasing out still useful old powerplants or making exceptionally large capital investments in retrofitting such plants with scrubbers.

Furthermore, cofiring might actually help to preserve mining jobs by making it possible for utilities to continue to burn high-sulfur coal. In many instances, scrubbers may be impractical. Cofiring will make it possible for electric utilities to continue to use their existing coal supplier when a powerplant would otherwise be forced to switch to low-sulfur coal, reduce output, or even close.

Advanced natural gas cofiring technologies promise to achieve even greater emissions reducitons at low capital cost. These technologies are known as gas reburn technologies. This term refers to the injection of natural gas into the upper furnace region of a boiler to produce a fuel-rich zone that reduces NO_x. Tests indicate that 20 percent natural gas cofiring in a reburn application can reduce NO_x emissions by 60 percent and SO_2 emissions by 20 percent. When mated with sorbent injection technology, gas reburn can produce a 50-percent reduction in SO_2 emissions. A demonstration project using as reburn with in-duct sorbent injection was selected for Federal cost sharing as part of the first round of the Department of Energy's Clean Coal Technology Program.

While basic cofiring technology is commercially available, further testing and full-scale demonstrations are needed. Some of the questions that remain to be answered include:

What is the optimal level of natural gas injection to achieve the maximum environmental and operational benefits of cofiring?

What influence might the use of different boiler types or different coal types have upon the effectiveness of cofiring,

In short, what is needed is a program to obtain critical operating data to define the optimum conditions for using cofiring to reduce emissions. This data will enable utilities and large industrial boiler operators to proceed with confidence in retrofitting their existing coal-fired boilers to accept cofiring.

The Cofiring Promotion Act of 1989 establishes just such a program. First, this legislation authorizes the Secretary of Energy to administer a 3-year, $18 million program for the research, development, and demonstration of cofiring technologies. Second, this legislation provides certain tax incentives to promote research and demonstration of these technologies. Third, this legislation clarifies that electric utility and industrial boiler operators that retrofit their faciltiies with cofiring technologies will not subject themselves to new source permitting review or the new source performance standards under the Clean Air Act. Similar legislation has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman RALPH REGULA.

In closing, cofiring technology has demonstrated great promise. The legislation that Senator FORD and I have introduced today is a modest measure that will help to ensure that this technology will live up to its promise when the time comes for compliance with the anticipated reauthorization of the Clean Air Act. I urge my colleagues to joint Senator FORD and me in sponsoring the Cofiring Promotion Act of 1989.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis and the text of the bill that I have introduced be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1740

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Cofiring Promotion Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress recognizes that—

(a) coal is an enormous domestic resources;

(b) harmful emissions from the combustion of coal will limit the percentage of the resource base which is deemed "useable.";

(c) natural gas is an abundant domestic resource that has superior environmental qualities;

(d) certain technologies combine natural gas with coal in order to reduce sulfur dioxide (SO_2) and nitrogen oxides (NO_x) emissions, particulates and carbon dioxide (CO_2) from the combustion of coal; and in some boilers improves the operating efficiency of the boiler by reducing slagging;

(e) certain technologies offer the potential to extend the usable coal resource base in the United States;

(f) the United States will continue to rely on domestic coal as a primary fuel in electric generation.

Therefore, it is in the national interest to encourage the utilization of those natural gas technologies that reduce (SO_2) and (NO_x) emissions resulting from the combustion of coal.

SEC. 101. RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.

(a) The Secretary of Energy shall establish and carry out a program of research, development and demonstrations of cofiring natural gas with coal in utility and large industrial boilers in order to determine optimal natural gas injection levels for both environmental and operational benefits;

(b) The Secretary shall enter into cooperative agreements with, and provide financial assistance, under this section, to appropriate parties for application of cofiring technologies to boilers to demonstrate this technology;

(c) There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary not more than $6 million for each of the fiscal years 1990, 1991 and 1992 for purposes of this Section.

SEC. 102. INCENTIVES FOR COFIRING.

(a) CREDIT FOR RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATION.—Section 41(d)(3)(A) of the Internal
